

ful sentinel over the future interests of this populous and growing county. The other two Commissioners on the Board, Gen. Lucas Pond and Charles Endicott, Esq., have also given much careful thought and attention to all the details of the building. All these gentlemen, it is no more than simple justice to record, have faithfully worked together to secure a thoroughly noble and enduring structure, consistent with a judicious, and therefore truly economical expenditure of the public money. The result of their well-considered decisions will be felt for many years to come in the convenience, comfort and order, resulting to the conduct of the business of the County.

It should not escape mention, also, that after the completion of the new portions of the building, some important changes, resulting in a highly increased convenience and accommodation, were made in the interior of the older structure. By the alterations thus effected in both stories, the apartments have been increased in number, the staircases enlarged and made more convenient than before, the Law Library much improved in its accommodations, and the Court Room tastefully painted, and having its gallery remodelled with extensive accommodations for the public.

The formal completion of the whole project, and the inauguration of the new portions, as well as the re-occupation of the remodelled apartments of the older building, took place at the opening of the term of the Superior Court, on Tuesday, the 17th day of December 1861. The County of Norfolk is thus placed in possession of a building which is likely to meet all the wants and requirements of the various courts for many years to come. The structure thus enlarged and remodelled is, throughout, of two finished stories in height, and contains the following described apartments, occupied by the various County officers and their assistants.

The first story contains separate apartments for the Court Judges' retiring-room; Counsellors' retiring-room; County Commissioners; Messenger; Grand Jury; Female Witnesses; three rooms for the Register of Probate and Insolvency, Assistant Register and Clerks; County Treasurer; Grand Jury and Court of Insolvency; District Attorney and Judge of Insolvency; Grand Jury Witness room. Besides the above named apartments there are ample public corridors and staircases, and a private staircase for the Judges and Counsel.

The second story is appropriated for large Court Room, Law Library, Judges' and Counsellors' Consultation Room, ante-room for Court officers, Traverse Jury Rooms, two rooms for Clerk of Courts and Assistant Clerk, room for High Sheriff and Deputies, another room for Traverse Jury, three rooms for Register of Deeds, and the Clerks of his department.

The whole building is heated by steam apparatus which is located in the basement; and the basement is otherwise occupied for storage, prisoners' cells, and water-closets. The gallery of the large Court Room is accessible from the corridor of the second story by an ample staircase, which is thence continued to the floor of dome; thence there is a convenient staircase leading to the lantern of the dome, from the floor thereof.

The building is well provided with plumbing works, located at convenient points, in both stories of the old and new parts of the structure. The windows in the exterior walls are numerous and large, rendering every apartment used for the County Officers and Courts pleasant and healthy, and the accessibility of the several apartments is without exception. It is but just to say that but few public buildings in this vicinity equal this in pleasantness and convenience of internal arrangement.—Norfolk County Journal.

For the Patriot. The Fire Department.

To the Publisher of the Patriot: By reference to the Auditors' Report, I find that the expenses of the Fire Department for the year 1860, was $2,291.17, being about 10 per cent of the entire amount raised for town purposes. The people of the town have some right to expect some return for this outlay besides holiday play; if it is a fair question, I would like to know how long it ought to take an engine to get ready to throw a stream on a burning building, after the alarm of fire is given, supposing the distance to be less than a quarter of a mile from the Town Hall? Perhaps some of your readers may answer. It may not be amiss for the citizens to consider the expediency of abolishing the entire Fire Department, and trusting to the citizens who would volunteer to man the brakes in case of fire; most of the work at a fire now must be done by volunteers.

As the subject of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia is now agitated, it may be interesting to know that the total population of the District is 61,122, of which 11,131 are free blacks, and 3185 are slaves, of which 1744 are in Washington.

The Colt's Firearm Company, at Hartford, Connecticut, employ 2,000 men in making revolvers.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 4th, 1862.

BORN TO MASTER, OF NOSEKARE WE.

TO THE PUBLIC. At this stage of our journey—at the threshold of the new year, we must be permitted to offer you once more our congratulations. In taking leave of the old year, we trust it will not be a leave taking of old friends, but that they will continue to jog along with us to our journey's end. And here, our duty prompts us, to return our acknowledgments to those kind friends, who with their pen and their counsel, have so essentially aided us in our labors; their contributions have done much to enrich our columns, and their smiles gave us encouragement to persevere. To our advertising patrons, we owe many thanks; they have strengthened our arm, and contributed generously toward the success of our enterprise; it will ever be our aim, to deserve well of them, and to merit a continuance of their favors. With this number, the Patriot commences the twenty-six volume. It has outlived one generation, and we have no apprehension, but the liberality of the community will enable it to outlive another.

WINTER. The old adage, that "Winter never runs in the sky," is likely to be verified this season. Since Christmas, the thermometer has gone down, down, down to zero—and yesterday morning, it was a number of degrees on the other side. Snow, we have none; and the merry chimneys of the sleigh bell are as mute as they will be at midsummer. We are a strange people—worship strange gods, and have a strange climate. But a few mornings since, our neighbor, Mrs. W. told us, that the day previous, she gathered from her vines, ripe strawberries! Think of that; ripe strawberries in January! and raised in the open air. We thought Jack Frost had a distaste for such things, and nipped them in the bud.

FIRE. On Tuesday evening, about eight o'clock, flames were discovered bursting from the roof of a two-story, frame tenement, situated on Sea street, in this town—the property of Mr. Daniel Dinegan, and occupied by a single tenant—Mrs. Sullivan.

The alarm soon spread, and the engines were promptly on the spot. Owing to a scarcity of water in the neighborhood, a line had to be formed to the brook, distant about thirty rods, and the suction put on; but unfortunately, when the word was given to lead off, the Niagara, under the management of a comely set of "old boys," refused to operate—her works were froze up. This interruption, caused some delay, and time for the fire to make such progress, that the fire was entertained that the whole square would be laid in ruins, as other buildings had taken fire. But the weather was mild, the wind light, and the Department when they brought their whole force to bear upon it, soon brought it under subjection.

This is the second visitation, from a similar cause, Mr. Dinegan has met, within six months, in the same neighborhood. He was insured, we learn, on the building, which was consumed, six hundred dollars, at the Insurance Company in this town. There is no cause assigned for the fire; it is not known whether it was the result of accident, "spontaneous combustion," or design.

STILL ANOTHER. Our Fire Department, on Wednesday evening, about the same hour, was called to another scene of conflagration. The old dwelling, known as the Bryant Newcomb house, at the Neck, was discovered to be on fire, and in a short time, was burnt to the ground. The occupants had moved out but the day before, and at the time of the accident, the house was empty. A change in the weather had put the works of the Niagara, right again, and this time, she took her place in the ranks. There was an insurance on the property, at Dedham, for three hundred dollars. It is said, there is no doubt that it was the work of an incendiary.

FATAL ACCIDENT. Mr. Lyman Williams, a native of Weymouth, and for many years a citizen of this town and employed at the Poor Farm, was engaged on Tuesday last in drawing wood with an ox team, when accidentally he slipped down, and the wheels of the loaded vehicle passed over his body, breaking many of his ribs and otherwise injuring him inwardly, causing his death in a few hours. He was at the time of the sad mishap descending the hill just below Mr. Ebenezer Hershey's, on Coddington street—some eighth of a mile from the Almshouse, where he succeeded in reaching, by the aid of Mrs. Spear, the Superintendent's wife, who saw the accident and went and met him. Mr. Williams had reached his fifty-third year, and was generally liked by all who were acquainted with him.

BURGLARY. On Tuesday evening, the house of Mr. Nathaniel White, on School street, was entered, and the clothes horse, which had received that day's washing, was relieved of its burden. The visit was made about midnight, by some shiftless scamp, at that bewitching hour, when Morpheus reigns supreme.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, JAN. 1, 1862.

The all absorbing topic here the past week, has been the release of Mason and Slidell. There will be a great difference of public sentiment growing out of this action of the Federal Government, as we begin to see bitterly expressed in many of the public prints. Well, fire away gentlemen, your wrath will soon become cool. The birds are flown from Fort Warren—and whereas they were lately bagged, now they are unbagged and as free as air. Seriously, there are good reasons for the surrender of these rebel beauties. Our American friends in Europe, as far as we can learn, are unanimous for their release. On the international law question, the public voice of statesmen on the Continent is opposed, tooth and nail to us; and if we go to war on this issue, their sympathies will be with John Bull. About this memorable period, we have as much as we can do to fight the rebels. President Lincoln was right when he said, "One war at a time." And for us to go to fight with England, when the whole civilized world, thus far, has pronounced our course in the Mason and Slidell affair wrong, would be impolitic and unwise. The British people are terribly mad with us and are spilling over for hostilities. Let us just at this time, pursue a moderate and mild course, that will strengthen the outside friends we have, if any, and prepare the way for a re-action in our favor. Let us keep in mind, that nothing would delight the rebels so much as war between the United States and England. A future day is coming, after the Southern rebellion is put down, we shall have leisure and ample preparation to square accounts with Great Britain. The principal of international law, as to the right of search and seizure, is clearly settled in the minds of the English Ministry, that belligerents have no right to meddle with the persons and property of a neutral vessel, bound from one neutral port to another neutral port.

An important question is before our Congress, relative to the rebellion. Mr. Stevens of Pennsylvania, maintaining that the blockade was a quasi admission of the nationality of those ports, now blockaded—and that it was not a correct principle for a nation to blockade its own ports. Why not have brought this delicate matter up at the extra session of Congress, in July last, rather than at this juncture, when the Administration is beset on all sides with difficulties.

Since my last, a general bank suspension of specie payments has come over our land, drawing in the vortex, the National Treasury. It is somewhat humiliating for banks or individuals to repudiate the legal tender payment of their notes. There are good reasons for bank suspensions just at this time; and the embarrassment will be temporary—as a resumption of specie payment will follow soon if we have no European war—that proviso must be put in of course.

For the Patriot
A Sunday Visit.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

In a recent visit to the Universalist Sunday School I was pleased to find so many bright-eyed boys and girls there. They were all quiet and attentive to their lessons. I was glad, also, to find a sufficient number of teachers for the scholars, and all appeared so deeply interested in the good work. After the regular exercises, there were recitations in poetry and a dialogue by several little girls who did finely. Their parts were well committed, and spoken distinctly. The School is conducted in an admirable manner by Mr. Abercrombie, the faithful Superintendent. Although the School is well attended, yet I could not help thinking, if all the friends of this Church were as interested in the religious welfare of their children as they should be, the number of scholars would still be increased.

The School begins at half past nine, and continues one hour. This gives ample opportunity to get the children ready, and the time is so short, that the youngest scholars do not become weary.

Are there not some friends who can add two or three more scholars to this Christian Sunday School? Are there not some families in town, who are not connected with any church, that would like to send their children to this School? If so, their children will be gladly welcomed here. Let us remember that the children of to-day are the men and women of twenty years hence. We must spare no pains to instruct them in Christian truth and virtue. Let us remember that the Saviour's blessing rests upon little children—and if we do our duty towards them, when we have passed away, they will rise up and call us blessed.

A FRIEND OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

FIRE IN FOXBORO. The Universalist church in Foxboro' was discovered to be on fire about 2 o'clock, on Monday morning last. By strenuous exertions the fire was subdued by the citizens, though for some unknown cause the only engine in the village would not work. Probable loss $1800. Insured in Quincy Mutual for $1600; in Norfolk Mutual, Dedham, for $1800.

A GEM. That truly beautiful weekly, "GLEASON'S LITERARY COMPANION," for this week and the new year, we have received. This number is finely illustrated, and is the first of a new volume, containing sixteen elegant pages, as open and fair as any reader's eye would desire to feast upon. The "LITERARY COMPANION" is a justly popular literary publication. What is not there found of wit and humor, foreign and home miscellany, dew-drops of wisdom, valuable receipts, and instruction in domestic affairs, is not worth reading or knowing. Gleason understands the wants of those who seek enjoyment and instruction through the medium of reading. The circulation of the COMPANION is very large, and rapidly increasing.—The paper deserves all the success it is meeting with.—Saturday Evening Express.

A GEM. That truly beautiful weekly, GLEASON'S LITERARY COMPANION, for this week and the new year, we have received. This number is finely illustrated, and the first of a new volume, containing sixteen elegant pages, as open and fair as any reader's eye would desire to feast upon. The LITERARY COMPANION is a justly popular literary publication. What is not there of wit and humor, foreign and home miscellany, dew-drops of wisdom, valuable receipts, and instruction in domestic affairs, not worth reading or knowing. Gleason understands the wants of those who seek enjoyment and instruction through the medium of reading. The circulation of the COMPANION is very large, and rapidly increasing. The paper deserves all the success it is meeting with.—Saturday Evening Express.

A CARD.
Once more the subscriber feels under deep obligation to the friends of Quincy, and citizens generally, for their unity and in saving her property from the devouring flames, in the evening of the 31st ult., and would return them their heartfelt thanks.

Poetry.

Life's Battle Field.

Each has his own path in life,
A circle small within his ken—
And a small circle, too, perchance—
We cannot all be famous men!
And duties are not truly done
By pining vainly after fame,
Or fretting for the want of chance
To quickly make a brilliant name.

A brilliant name! Too oft it is
The phantom that leads many on,
Until, too late, they wake and find
The time for real endeavor gone!
Better to fill a lowly place,
And labor there with soul and heart,
Than dream ambitiously of wealth
Till time and youthful strength depart.

Do I speak sadly? Truth it is That in the lowest place of life
A man can act a hero's part,
Amid the daily toil and strife!
Aye, amid hourly din and care,
Even though within the humblest home,
Can shine in virtue great and grand
As ever glided ancient Rome!

Life's heroism does not need
A spacious or a lofty stage;
Life's greatest deeds are not all writ
Upon the flaming golden page!
Believe me, glorious work is done,
As the world's wheels still onward go,
Which ten-toned rumor never yet
Hath blazoned, or will ever know.

Self-conquest, self-devotion—these Are the high gifts which give to all
Who own them that well-tempered mind,
Prepared alike to win or fail—
Prepared, with fitting mien, to meet
The happy good or bitter ill—
Crabbed, whether fate the cup
With nectar or with gall may fill!

Each of these words in loftier truth,
Is a sure talisman in life,
To guard and strengthen heart and brain
In time of hourly din and strife;
All stations they alike best—
The peasant's cot or monarch's throne—
To everyman a priceless gift
They bring, in self-respect alone.

Forthright

Forthright, when'er an unjust taint
Shall quickly flash thine eye;
And flash thine cheek with swift desire
To give some sharp reply.

Forthright! worth only kindles wrath,
And stirs up passion's fire;
Who answerest softly mildly leads
To check the bitterest ire.

Forthright, though some well-meaning friend
Perchance with some good intent,
Should roughly crush some sanguine hope,
Or brilliant plan prevent.

Forthright, their wisdom may be far Superior to thine own;
They may have built some castles, too,
And seen them overthrow.

Forthright, when sickness claims thy care,
And warming accents prove,
Breathing complaining, fretful tones,
Said trials to thy love.

Forthright, thou knowest not how keen
The pain which wells
Relief in feverish words, and yet
Means not to be unkind.

Forthright, when childhood's noisy mirth
Distracts thy throbbing brain;
Which, pressed with many anxious cares,
Seems bursting with its pain.

Forthright, O do not wound their hearts
Because thine is oppressed,
By careless or impatient tones,
When they would be caressed.

Forthright, I know 't will cause a pang,
And many a fervent prayer,
And mighty efforts, ere thou learn
In all things to forbear.

Anecdotes.

Father, did you ever have another wife besides mother?
No, my boy; what possessed you to ask such a question?
Because I saw in the old family Bible where you married Anne Domin, in 1835, and that isn't mother, for her name was Sally Smith.

A dark-colored man once went to Portland, Maine, and attended church. With the dinner came a great multitude of flies all uninvited; but that mattered nothing. They buzzed about, one over another and lighted here and there, making quite as free as if they had been a portion of the princely train. Duke Charles was angry at this and calling the hostess said:

Here, old bedlame, let the flies have a separate table.

The hostess, a very quiet woman, did as she was ordered; set out another table and then coming up to the Duke, said:

The table is served. Will your highness now order the flies to be seated?

A schoolmaster asked one of his fair pupils—

Can you decline a kiss?
Dropping a perplexed courtesy, she modestly replied:

Yes, sir; but I don't like to.

Mother, can't I go and have my daguerreotype taken?
No, my child, I guess it isn't worth while. Well, then, you might let me have a tooth pulled; I never go anywhere

Friends and Patrons!

PURE LIQUORS AND WINES FOR PRIVATE USE AND MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers, a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say that our experience of more than FORTY years as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and that every article sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communication by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue of goods, prices, &c.

HEBARD'S PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid! A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Spirit, or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than ALL it is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.

State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.

DR. LA CROIX'S PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATISE

ON THE Physiological View of Marriage. 250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRAVINGS. Price only TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union. On the intricacies of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bluishness, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c. &c. It is a truthful exposure of the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain secret doubts of their physical condition, and who are conscious of having hazarded the health, happiness and privileges to which every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness, pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in the ears, weakness of vision, and never failed to effect speedy cures without any bad results will use none but Dr. DeLancy's Female Periodical Pills. The only precaution necessary to be observed is, ladies should not take them if they have reason to believe they are in certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying each box), though always safe and healthy, so gentle, yet so active as to cure.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

THE "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE." For married ladies whose health will not admit of a high degree of exercise, and who desire to increase their families, may be obtained as above. New Year's Gift.

BY LINDA LINDAN.

[The following beautiful thoughts, appropriate for the season, we regret were not received in time for our last issue.]

Yes, I will—I just will! Why, in the world didn't I think of it before. To be sure, I should very much like that beautiful silk, at Brown's, to wear at cousin Emma's birthday party; but I can do without it, very well. There's my changeable silk—that's just as good as new, and what if it is old-fashioned; I can get me to help me alter it, and it will do well enough. One must not be too particular these hard times; and then, there's my French merino, and the nice cashmere, Uncle Harry gave me, and plenty for every day wear. Phaw! I don't want any new dresses. I have more now than I can wear out all winter—and what a lot of nice things that twenty-five dollars will buy for poor Mrs. Weston. She's just getting able to sit up now, and she shall have a good warm shawl to wrap around her when it's very cold, and I'll get some flour, coffee, tea, sugar, and some shoes and books for Willie and Lucy, so they can go to school. Oh! if I was only rich! I'll go right down and see pa and ma, but I won't tell them much now. And away ran the little lady, clapping her hands and dancing all the way into the room where Mr. and Mrs. Lee were sitting.

Oh, pa! she exclaimed, do you care what I do with the money you gave me the other day?

Do I care? why Lizzie, I thought you wanted a new silk dress to wear to Emma's birthday party.

Well, I thought so too, but I don't now—and I want the money for something else. Now, don't say I can't have it. I won't spend it foolishly; indeed I won't; and she put her arms around her dear father's neck, very coquishly, and with many kisses, said,—say, pa, may I spend it as I choose?

Yes, yes, darling, spend it as you choose, he said, returning her caress; but Lizzie, won't you tell us what you are going to do?

Oh, yes, after a while—but not now, if you please. Ma, I want to go over to Farmer Smith's this afternoon; may I go?

If you wish; but you must return in time to help me get tea; for you know I have no other kitchen maid now.

And you don't want any other, do you? wasn't those capital biscuits we had for breakfast this morning? and the cup of coffee was just as nice and clear as ever Bridget made in her life. I do believe I shall soon be chief cook.

And away the merry girl went—her face covered with smiles, and her heart full of joy.

Soon after dinner, Lizzie came down stairs in cloak, hood, gloves and furs—for the air was keen and wintry—and passing out into the orchard, crossed a large pasture and entered a lane leading directly to a large, comfortable looking farm-house. Every thing about betokened thrift and comfort. The barns were well filled with hay and grain; the yards were graced by sleek horses and fine cows—plump turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens were running in every direction. The old Farmer met Lizzie at the gate, and taking both her hands in his, he said, why Lizzie, is this you? glad to see you; come right in and see the folks.

Lizzie was always welcome at the farm house; for every one, from oldest to youngest, loved her. Her bright, cheerful face, and gentle, loving heart, made her a general favorite. She chatted and sung with the young Smiths, and read the newspaper for the Farmer and his wife. After sitting some time, Lizzie said, well, it is almost time it was at home, and I haven't told you my errand yet, Mr. Smith.

Your errand! Then you did not come just for the pleasure of seeing us, after all; well, what is it? he said, as he playfully seated her on his knee.

I came a begging, Farmer Smith; and she looked straight in his face. A begging! what, you, Lizzie Lee, come a begging! what can you want? I promise you shall have it if it's here—so what is it?

I don't want any thing myself, but you have got over so much timber land, and I thought perhaps you'd take a two story road to Mrs. Weston's on New Year's day; wouldn't you, Mr. Smith?

Well, I declare; who would think a young head like yours would be making such plans as that. I'm glad you did think of it, and mentioned it, too. Yes, I'll send her a load of wood.

John and James shall take it over on New Year's day; will that do?

O, yes, and how glad she will be. You know she has been sick for a month. She was tired and worried about to death before her husband died; and soon after the funeral, she was obliged to give up entirely. I'm not a bit sorry he died, for he used to get drunk so much—and then he would beat poor Lucy and Willie, and scold so dreadfully! I know they'll feel better without him.

Yes, Lizzie, I know he was a very bad man; but before you go home, you must come out to the barn and see the new bossy, as the children call it. It's a lively little thing.

Lizzie went out to the barn, and the children went too; for though they had so many bossies, this was the smallest one—and they never tired of praising its pretty white face, and watching its gambols. There, now, said Farmer Smith, ain't that a pretty calf, and it's only a week old. Lizzie delighted to watch the pranks of the calves, but declared that Speck was the nicest cow, and little white face the prettiest calf in the lot. They went back to the house, and Lizzie put on her things and returned home. After she was gone, Farmer Smith seated himself by the great fireplace, and was soon enveloped in a cloud of smoke, for he loved his pipe almost as well as he did his good wife. After puffing away quietly for some time, Mrs. Smith heard a voice from behind the smoke, saying, wife, wife! what if I should give Speck and her calf to Mrs. Weston?

Why, then, she'd have a cow of her own, I reckon. But think you can afford it, husband?

I believe so; you know we've had no doctor's bills to pay for a year or more—and we raised a fine crop last summer, and have had so much good fortune, that I really feel very grateful; and I know of no better way of expressing my thanks than by doing what I can for those who are less fortunate. That witch of a Lizzie, bless her kind heart, she put me in mind of it, and I don't think I shall ever be the poorer for giving a cow to a poor woman. We shall still have plenty left. What say you, wife; shall she have her, or not?

Certainly! and I am glad to think you can afford it. If she can make out to keep along till she gets well again, she'll have no trouble to make a living. Willie is large enough to chop her wood and help tend garden; and Lizzie is so handy with her needle, and helps her a sight. I reckon she'll be glad of a cow, for they've never had one since the one he sold to pay his liquor bill. Hard drinking just ruined that man.

Now kind reader, let us look in at Mrs. Weston's humble house on New Year's day. In a neat, but a scantily furnished room, sat Mrs. Weston, in an old fashioned arm chair, with her knitting work in her hand, and a pleasant smile on her face. The children were trying on their new shoes, and looking at the new books, wondering who it could be that left all these nice things on the back porch, labelled "For Mrs. Weston." Lucy had thrown the new shawl over her mother's shoulders, and said she was sure she would soon be well now, for she could have a nice cup of tea whenever she wished, and it would strengthen her so much, when she had no appetite for food.

O, mother—Lucy—look! there's Mr. Smith driving a great cow and calf right into our back yard. I wonder who told him he might do that? said Willie, very indignantly. In a moment there was a rap at the door, and Lucy opened it to admit Mr. Smith.

Good morning, Mrs. Weston; how's your health, and how do you stand this cold weather?

I am much better, thank you, she replied, but this weather is rather unpleasant for me. I cannot bear cold as well as I once could.

Well, here comes a load of wood to keep you warm, and I have drove one of my cows up and put her into your yard, and want you to accept of her for a New Year's gift. She's an excellent cow, but I have a plenty left, so you must keep her, and I'll send some hay for her when I go home. Not one word, Mrs. Weston, said the good old Farmer, as she tried to express her thanks; not one word, for it does me as much good as it does you—so good morning. And Mr. Smith left the widow's home a happier man than when he came.

Verily, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

O, mother; said Willie, soon after Farmer Smith had gone, she's such a beauty, and I can milk her, too, for she's just as gentle as a lamb. I shall pay Mr. Smith for that cow some day, see if I don't; come Lucy, now let's get dinner; and what a splendid dinner it will be!

And so it proved; for just as they were ready to sit down, in came Lizzie Lee with a piece of roast turkey and plate of plum pudding. Mrs. Weston smiled kindly, but her heart was too full for words. Not so the children. They told her of all they had found on the little porch in the morning, and the blush and smile on Lizzie's sweet face, made them think that she knew something about it before. Willie led her to the window, and said, see there, Miss Lizzie!

Lizzie was at first astonished! Could it be that Mr. Smith had given his favorite cow? But the children told her the story in their own artless way, and she comprehended it all.

With a glad and joyful heart, Lizzie returned home, and left the little family to the quiet enjoyment of their New Year's dinner. Never did a more heartfelt thanksgiving ascend to the Great All-Father, than trembled on the lips of the grateful invalid, as she clasped her wasted hands in prayer, previous to partaking of that inviting repast. It would be difficult to decide which was the happiest that night—Farmer Smith, Lizzie Lee, or the Widow's little family.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

Strange Prophecies.

In the year 1815, the late Elkanah Watson, as appears in "Men and Times of the Revolution," (page 522, second edition) made and published the following estimate of the probable population of the United States for a long series of years. The actual

BURNED BY MASTER, OF PROSECUTION W. E.

Horse Railroads.

A case of considerable importance to Horse Railroad Corporations, has this week been decided in the Supreme Judicial Court. It will be remembered that at the last session of the Legislature, the Quincy Railroad Company obtained a charter, giving them authority to construct and run a Horse Railroad from Quincy to Boston, connecting with the Dorchester Avenue Railroad, at Field's Corner or Glover's Corner, in said town. The Quincy Railroad Company appealed to the Selectmen of Dorchester in the usual way for a location according to their charter. And now another party appears in the shape of the Dorchester Extension Railway Company; who, by virtue of a charter granted in 1859, claims a right to build a railroad over the same streets that the Quincy Company had obtained authority to build on; in fact, claimed a roving privilege to build railroads on any and all the streets of Dorchester. The Selectmen not only refused to grant the location asked, but set up a plea that it was entirely within their discretion to give the Quincy Railroad Company any location within the limits of the town of Dorchester at all; and acting on this view, they gave the Dorchester Extension Railway Company one part of the location, and the Quincy Company the rest; declaring that unless the said Quincy Company accepted what was thus given them, they should have none at all. The Quincy Railroad Company feeling justly aggrieved in this being despoiled of rights, applied to the Supreme Court for a writ or Mandamus to compel the Selectmen to locate their road to either point named in the charter, and the Court has given their decision in favor of the Quincy Railroad Company; a copy of which we annex for the benefit of our readers:

DECISION.

"Having heard the parties, I have consulted with all the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, excepting Mr. Justice Hoar, who was not present—and they all concur with me in the opinion, that by the construction of the Charter of the petitioners it gives them the right to have their Railroad established from Neponset Bridge through Dorchester to Glover's Corner or to Field's Corner, so as to connect at one of these points with the Dorchester Avenue Railroad; and that the Selectmen have failed to complete their duty in not designating streets and highways for this purpose through the whole distance. The arrangements made by them in regard to the connection with the Dorchester Extension Railroad, is void, there being no authority for it contained in the Statutes. It is now their duty to complete the designation of streets and highways throughout the entire route, exercising their own best judgment as to what route is most convenient and advantageous for the public, as well as for the petitioners; and the whole duty required by the Statute should be performed so as to give the petitioners a reasonable time to accept the location within one year from the 15th of February last. Peremptory Mandamus to issue accordingly. Signed, R. A. CHAPMAN, J. S. J. C."

GOOD MANAGEMENT. We learn from Mr. Leighton, who has recently returned from a short visit at the House of Correction, at Dedham, that the inmates are provided with food that is good, fresh, and well-cooked; and every thing appertaining to their comfort is carefully looked after by the genial and judicious manager. This is as it should be; and we hope that Sheriff Thomas may long be kept in that responsible and worthy position, which he is so well qualified for, as time has proved.

RELEASED. We learn that Albert French, son of Mr. Alden French of this town, who was sentenced to the State Prison for life, for setting fire to a dwelling-house some three years since, was released one day the present week on condition that he would enter the United States' service, which he accordingly did by enlisting in the Navy.

GOOD NEWS. It gives us pleasure to be able to inform our citizens that Mr. Urban Codworth, Jr., who, it will be remembered, had his leg badly broken, is recovering as fast as could be reasonably expected.

SUSPENDED. The billiard saloon, corner of Washington and Coddington streets, kept by E. W. Underwood, stopped operations on Monday last, we learn, for want of public encouragement and support.

SHOCKING DEATH. A little girl of four or five years, a daughter of Mr. Nahum Harden, of East Bridgewater, on the afternoon of the 21st ult., was playing with other children, in a field near her father's, where bushes were being burned, and either by being pushed by her companions, or by venturing too near the blaze, her clothes took fire and she was so badly burned that she lived but a few hours.

Gov. Andrew's Address.

The Governor of the Commonwealth was inaugurated on the 3d inst., and delivered his annual address to the Legislature on the condition of the State. We give a brief synopsis of the document, under the appropriate heads.

FINANCES. The ordinary expenses of the Commonwealth have been a million dollars; and with payments that were chargeable to last year, there has been drawn from the treasury, for ordinary expenses, $1,180,408, which is in excess of the ordinary receipts, $53,242, for which provision is to be made by legislation.

The permanent liabilities of the State have been increased during the year, $397,208; of which $300,000 was the floating debt, which has been funded, and $297,208 paid on account of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad.

The expenditures for military purposes have been $3,384,644. Of these there has been received from the National Government from other States to which ordinance was sold, and from other sources, enough to reduce it to $2,292,833.

MILITARY. The State has contributed five regiments of infantry, one battery of artillery, and one battalion of rifles, of her militia, to the three months' service. To the three years' service she has sent as volunteers, twenty-four regiments of infantry, one of cavalry, five batteries of artillery, two companies of sharpshooters, and an infantry battalion of five companies. Six companies more become attached to two regiments from the State of New York. All regiments and companies, whether of infantry or artillery, both for three years' and three months' service, have with the exception of one battery, received their armament from the Commonwealth.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT. The Governor renews his recommendation for the repeal of the "Two Years Amendment," and says:—"If for any reason, any persons have ever doubted the loyalty or trusted the patriotism of this class of our citizens, let the events of the past year admonish them that such doubts and such distrusts were not merited, and prompt them to concur, cordially and unhesitatingly, in the restoration of an equal franchise."

RELIEF OF FAMILIES OF VOLUNTEERS. The Governor recommends that those Massachusetts companies which enlisted in New York regiments be treated as those in Massachusetts regiments. He recommends the same for those who have enlisted under Gen. Butler, though he does not let the occasion pass to rap the General severely for his mode of recruiting. It is supposed that this relief expenditure has reached about a quarter of a million dollars. He suggests other relief—such as exemption from certain actions of law, while men are in the military or naval service of the United States.

Congressional Districts are to be re-arranged, as under the new census Massachusetts loses one member of Congress; and Gov. Andrew wishes the Legislature to provide that members may be selected from any part of the State.

DIRECT NATIONAL TAX. The part of the twenty millions of national tax to be assessed on lands, and improvements and dwellings houses, apportioned to Massachusetts is $224,581. This the Governor has assured the National Government, will be collected by the State, thereby saving fifteen per cent. for collection. As the Governor regards this $10,000,000 on the State as an annual tax, a continuing imposition, and not confined to this year, the Legislature is asked to assume the burden at once, and not shift it to another generation.

INTEREST MONEY. The repeal of usury laws is recommended, on the ground that they carry capital abroad, and it would be wiser to let men make their own bargains.

THE DEATH PENALTY. The Governor deplores, and he declares it needless, dangerous and corrupting. If he had recommended the abolition of the pardoning powers with the gallows, this part of the message would be more acceptable.

OF EDUCATION AND SCHOOLS, he says:—"Let us never forget our nurseries of learning, the strength, the solace, the inspiration of a people. Rich with spoils of thought, great in ideas, powerful by the possession of knowledge, and the education of the mind, happy in the possession of fields no enemy can dispute, and treasures no ravage can destroy—such a people, in the fear of God and the love of man, are immortal as the nature they inherit, and grand as their destiny."

The annual appropriation of $14,500, for the four Normal Schools, is inadequate for their wants; and an increase of $1,500 is asked for them.

PREPARATION FOR LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS AND MINISTERIAL OFFICES. Under this head he recommends that five dollars be charged for commissions of Justices of the Peace, Notaries Public, and Commissioners for Massachusetts in other States, which would amount to something, since we have about seven thousand Justices and five hundred Notaries.

MILITARY DEFENCES of the sea coast are strongly urged upon the legislature. The permanent fortification of Boston Harbor will be attended to by the Federal authorities;

but Provincetown, which commands our coast and has an anchorage in which whole navies might ride, and the Vineyard Sound, which is the great highway of our coastwise commerce, while 30,000 vessels annually seek shelter, while 90,000 vessels have been counted as passing Gay Head in a year, are worthy of particular attention.

The MILITIA, the Governor would have brought to the highest perfection. The enrolled men of the State are 157,496. Those now in the army are 27,275; and in the navy as sailors and marines 11,000, leaving 120,000 at home, within the prescribed age for military enrolment.

Our NATIONAL CAUSE forms the closing topic of the address, from which we extract the following:—

"The Great Rebellion must be put down, and its promoters crushed beneath the ruins of their own ambition. The great crime of history must receive a doom so swift and sure, that the enemies of Popular Government shall stand in awe while contemplating the elastic energy and concentrative power of Democratic Institutions, and a Free People. The monstrous character of the crime has never yet been adequately conceived, nor is language able fully to describe it. Groundless and causeless in its origin, it began and grew up, and continues under the lead and direction of men who had received all the favors, and enjoyed all the blessings of our government, and who were bound by official oaths to maintain it. Reckless of consequences, and determined to ruin where they could not rule, they conspired against the welfare of nearly thirty millions of people, and their countless posterity; they plunged them with inconceivable madness into every danger, and suffering and sorrow, which can be generated by domestic war; and they stand with souls blackened by the selfishness and audacious barbarity of the crime—red handed and guilty before God and History, of the slaughter of the innocent and the blood of the brave."

Boston, Jan. 9, 1862.

Winter has at last set in, and its chilling influence is seen in the limited operations of business. Notwithstanding this spathy, the money market on change appears healthy, and accessible at fair rates on good paper. The stock market to-day is rather brisk, with an upward tendency in speculative sorts. The prospects of business reaction in the spring are not very encouraging. The State Legislature commenced its session on New Year's day—and the respective branches are now fully organized for business. The Speaker of the House, an accomplished man, gives promise of making an excellent presiding officer. It is a hard but honorable office to fill. Ex-Governor Clifford is President of the Senate; being booked up in parliamentary tactics, he will get along very well. The Standing Committee are announced. Whatever may have been the political antecedents of Hon. Caleb Cushing, a member of the House, from Newburyport, he certainly is placed by the Speaker in a high position, being Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the first in rank of the Standing Committees of any legislative body.

Your respected Representative from Quincy, Noah Cummings, Esq., is on the Standing Committee on Towns. He will be found useful here, as he is esteemed and useful at home. The popular branch is composed of some 256 members—the Senate always of 40 members. Some of the ablest men of Massachusetts, are found the present winter in our Legislature. A short session is talked of. The prompt and judicious manner in which the present Legislature has been organized, without regard to party, Mr. Bullock having been unanimously elected Speaker, is a good omen that a few but good laws will be passed during the session, divested of partisan bias.

A general uneasiness in the public mind is apparent from the masterly inactivity of our army of a half million of soldiers reposing on the banks of the Potomac. If matters go on at this rate, with no decisive blow for three months to come, there is too much reason to fear, the presence of British, French and Spanish Ministers at Richmond as well as at Washington. Our mighty army, under General McClellan, should show that we are men, and endeavor to be successful in putting down treason and rebellion, and disapproval of other nations, who are convinced we are utterly unable to prosecute with hope of success. Congress is doing nothing and the grand army is doing nothing. If the Commanding General hesitates to give battle about this time to Beauregard, in the name of heaven and liberty put old General Wool in his place, and tell him to go ahead—in a few days he would dine with his Staff at Richmond, and crush the head, neck and back of rebellion. The hopes of the Nation, for its integrity and preservation rest with our army in the field. We believe an early advance will be crowned by victory.

Our Municipal Government was organized on Monday. The address of the Mayor was satisfactory to a large portion of his constituents. Like all public men coming into office he recommended retrenchment—which is no idle warning to our whole State, of 332 towns, containing 1,132,369 inhabitants, including 211,309 voters, with a State valuation in 1850, of $597,936,995.46, and now much larger.

In view of meeting the direct tax, our cities and towns will act judiciously in adopting a rigid system of retrenchment at their annual meetings of the present year. It must be done, or our taxes will become oppressive and burdensome.

Marriages in Quincy, for 1861.

The following marriages have been recorded by the Town Clerk during the past year. It seems by the list that January and June are the most connubial months; each containing a record of eight. The list contains fifty-six marriages—there were fifty the year before.

THE SEASON. Since the New Year commenced, we have had a succession of cold weather. Ice, we are told, has been formed on our lakes and rivers, 12 inches in thickness. Dealers in the article, are now busy in harvesting it. Mr. Eaton, whose name has long been identified with this business, and whose friendly visits seems but yesterday, has housed an unusually large stock of excellent ice during the present week. The gathering scene, to those who have not witnessed it, is quite interesting.

MARIPOSA SALOON. This old and popular Saloon, on Hancock street, has been recently enlarged, and admirably arranged so as to give ample accommodation to its numerous visitors. Its proprietor has made arrangements for procuring the best of oysters, which he will furnish our citizens fresh from the shell at short notice.

APPOINTMENT. John Quincy Adams, of this town, son of Hon. Chas. Francis Adams, was on Monday last appointed Aid-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, vice Horace Binney Sargent, resigned.

Charles Francis Adams, Jr., brother to John Quincy, is one of the Lieutenants in the Mass. Cavalry regiment.

A tax of five cents on telegraphic messages is talked of.

For the Patriot.

Fire Department.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

In your last, I saw an article concerning the Fire Department of Quincy. The writer asks the question: "How long ought it to take an engine to get ready to throw a stream on the fire, allowing the distance to be less than a quarter of a mile from the Town Hall?"

What does he mean? Does he mean the fire or the engine? If he means the engine, the foremen of the machines located within the distance named, can answer for themselves; while those more remote, have no answer to make. But if he means the location of the fire, he can make allowances for the distance run, by the several engines, and by doing so, he can answer for himself, if he is posted in running and figures. As for the expediency of "disbanding the Fire Department," he had better see how many volunteers he can get to man the brakes, or make an estimate of the number that have ever done so at any fire within his recollection. Then let him show me where there is another Fire Department in any town where they have played on so many different fires and never lost but one building at any one time! When he does that, then we'll consider the expediency of "disbanding the Fire Department of Quincy."

AMOS.

ANOTHER SALOON. There is a great chance for a good time now. The rooms under Goodnow's Building have been very tastefully fitted up, an excellent bowling alley "laid" by the best workmen from Boston, and one of Bailey's superior billiard tables procured, which ought, together with the large airy rooms, give those who admire such sport all that they can ask.

We were pained to hear that our venerated and aged friend, Mr. John Kirk, of the West District, was, on Monday last, visited by a severe paralytic shock—followed by a fever, which have reduced him to a very low state.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The receipts of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad, for the year ending Nov. 30, 1861, were $505,330.77; expenses, $296,583.30. Passengers carried, 157,373. Fatal accidents, 5; not fatal, 2.

The Boston and Hingham Steamboat Company, pay an annual dividend of 16 per cent.

Gen. McClellan for the first time in several weeks appeared out of doors Monday, being able to ride in his carriage. He has nearly recovered his health.

There were two hundred and forty-seven pleasant days in 1861, and it rained thirty-six times, and snowed sixteen times.

The total amount expended by the Government in the purchase of fire arms since the beginning of the rebellion is twenty-two million dollars.

The receipts of flour and grain at Chicago during the year 1861 were equal to 55,175,100 bushels. This is an amazing aggregate, and may serve to give the world an idea of the inexhaustible fertility of the great agricultural region of the Northwestern portion of the United States.

Old Colony and Fall River Railroad stock gained three dollars per share in December.

The price of ordinary boots in Virginia at present, is twenty dollars a pair. The leather of old trunks is made into slippers. Clothing of all kinds is scarce.

Mr. Lemuel Thompson, a highly respectable citizen of Rochester New York, 64 years of age, came to his death on Tuesday by accidentally taking wine of colchicum instead of cough drops. As the dose taken was small, it is supposed that there must have been some predisposing influences at work in his system. The poison was given to him by a friend, who, by mistake, had taken the wrong bottle.

The number of persons returned to the Adjutant General's office, as enrolled agreeably to law in the militia of this Commonwealth, for the year 1861, is 157,496.

So far from that terrible distress and starvation that was predicted, the New York Sunday Times says the demands made upon the benevolent societies have not as yet reached the aggregate of former years.

"The O. C. & F. R. Railroad Company have entered into a written obligation to begin the construction of the railroad to Newport, on or before the 1st of March, 1862, and to complete and set it running by the 1st of July, 1863.

The number of patients in the army hospitals at Washington, Alexandria and Washington, 2d inst., was 1,155. Ten belonged to the Massachusetts 12th regiment.

As the Rev. F. P. Howland, of Abington, was about taking an East Cambridge car in Chardon street, Saturday evening, he fell inwardly upon the ice, fracturing the bones of his left leg, near the ankle.

The town hall of Lancaster was damaged to the amount of one thousand dollars by the late gale. A portion of the roof was carried away, and the building which is of brick, was considerably damaged.

At Chicago, the money chest of Paymaster Knize, of the army, disappeared from a hall in the upper story of his residence, where it had been left temporarily. The chest weighed 900 pounds, and contained about $650.—There is no clue to the robbers.

A CARD.

At a meeting of Niagara Engine Company, No. 1, held Saturday evening, January 4, a vote of thanks was passed to the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company, for their timely and liberal collation at the fire in Sea street, Dec. 31st. Also, to Mr. Meserve, for his polite attention on that occasion. A vote of thanks was also passed, to our retired Steward, for the faithful discharge of his duty the past nine years.

C. C. DICKERMAN, Clerk.

RICE COASTERS Sweeten a pint of milk
with loaf sugar, boil with it a stick of cinnamon, stir in sifted ground rice till quite thick. Take it off the fire, and add the whites of three eggs, well beaten; stir it again over the fire for two or three minutes, then put it into cups that have lain in cold water; do not wipe them. When cold, turn them out, and put them into the dish in which they are to be served; pour round them a custard made of the yolks of the eggs and little more than half a pint of milk. Put on the top a little red currant jelly or raspberry jam. A pretty supper dish.

"Dead as a Herring." The herring is a delicate fish. Whenever it is taken out of the water, even though it seems to have received no hurt, it gives a squeak, and immediately expires; and though it be thrown instantly back into the water, it never recovers. Hence the proverb, "Dead as a herring."

THE DIFFERENCE. An editor may insert
a thousand excellent things in a newspaper, and never hear a word of approbation from his readers; but just let a paragraph slip in by accident, of one or two lines not suited to their taste, and he will be sure to hear of it.

CHILDREN. Hard be his fate, who makes no childhood happy; it is so easy. It does not require wealth, or position, or fame; only a little kindness and the tact which it inspires. Give a child a chance to love, to play, to exercise his imagination and affection, and he will be happy. Give him the conditions of health - simple food, air, exercise, and a little variety in his occupations, and he will be happy, and expand in happiness.

The great chief of the Yonon Indians is called "Strike Three." He must be a powerful fellow.

AN EGG IN A BOTTLE. To accomplish this seemingly incredible act, requires the following preparation: You must take an egg and soak it in vinegar, and in process of time its shell will become quite soft, so that it may be extended lengthwise without breaking; then insert in the neck of a small bottle, and on pouring cold water upon it, it will assume its former figure and hardness.
This is really a curiosity, and well - those who are not in the secret to find out how it is accomplished.

A GOOD ANSWER. How can you do the most good? asked a lady of a little girl. By being myself just as good as I can be, was the reply.

"So far, so good," as the boy said when he had finished the first pot of his mother's jam.

That was a pretty conceit of a romantic husband and father whose name was Rose, who named his daughter "Wild," so that she grew up under the appellation of "Wild Rose." But the romance of the name was easily spoiled in a few years, for she married a man by the name of "Bull."

Miscellaneous.

Coming Down to First Principles.

BY MRS. S. C. RUSSELL.

Mrs. Weston sat in her parlor considering what she should do. The last office girl in a succession of seven had just gone to the cars without washing up the breakfast dishes, and the pretty mistress was too much hurried to answer her husband's pleasant good-by, a circumstance which did not improve the day's business, for Mr. Weston was deeply in love with his charming wife, and fretted more than he would have cared to acknowledge when things didn't go right with her.

The lady looked discontentedly round her pretty parlors. Every thing was clean, and nobody to clean, she soliloquized. There's all the coal that's been burned for a week unsifted - a great pile. There's a peck of stale bread in the closet, and a lot of heavy cake.
What shall I do? If I go into the city and lag round all day, to the officers, it will be no better. I pay the half dollar and their fare, they stay about a week, plague Edward and me to death, and leave every thing as dirty as it can be. O dear! we shall have to board in spite of ourselves.

A rap at the parlor door brought the lady to her feet, and smoothed out her face a little.
The visitor, a sensible, middle aged woman, saw that something was wrong, and soon got the whole story.

Now, what shall I do, Mrs. Wood? Must
I give up my pretty house and go to boarding again?

I don't think I should, replied the lady.
Did you really want my opinion?
Certainly. Why do you ask?
Because many people, dear, don't want the truth when they ask for it. Now, if you will excuse me, I will tell you what I think.

Tell me the truth. I shall like you all the better for it, the lady said.

Well, then, dear, if I were in your place, I would try the work myself a little while. I did my work for several years after my marriage,
indeed, until my children claimed all my time.
You, Mrs. Wood? exclaimed our heroine;
you, who was brought up so well.

It was because I was well brought up. My mother was a wise woman, and knew that her daughters could not always have their father's house to depend upon. My husband, (excuse my telling the whole story) was a clerk with a salary of a thousand dollars a year. Perhaps we were imprudent to marry without any thing ahead, but we thought we should be about as well off as if we waited. We went into a house about as large as this, only not so pretty; and my husband thought I must have a servant. But I knew something of the cost of keeping one, and resolved to do without.

Well, of course you had a woman to scrub and wash and do all such work as that?

No, indeed; I did it all; washing, ironing, scrubbing, sifting coal and all. I was never so healthy, never so happy as then; and more than all, I found more time for intellectual culture than many who kept one or two servants. Now, dear, have you a mind to try?

I think I will but I don't know what Edward will say to it.

He won't love you any the less for it.
Can I help you in any way?

Yes, if you will show me a little about making bread, for I don't know much about that. I can make nice cake and scallop oysters, and all those things. I wish I could make bread.

You'll soon learn, with a little care, the visitor said; divesting herself of bonnet, shawl and gloves. Have you a calico dress?
she asked Mrs. Weston. That pretty wrapper won't look just right in the kitchen, I'm afraid.

The dress was changed, the loaf of bread was made, one of cake baked, and various other things done before the visitor left. Mrs.
Weston felt quite proud of the praise she received for her readiness in learning, and went back to the kitchen with quite a light heart.

The first thing that met her eye on going back to the kitchen was the careless looking closet. All my pretty china in such a condition! she exclaimed, and began at once to take them from the shelves. There were two or three nice pieces missing, which didn't improve her desire for another girl, and she worked diligently until the shelves and drawers were clean, the dishes all washed and replaced, the silver rubbed, and the whole closet a model of neatness.

There, that looks as it ought to always,
she said to herself, as she closed the door.
Then came the dining room. The corners were full of dirt, and it must be swept.
There were cobwebs to be brushed down, door-nobs to be rubbed, and spots to be wiped from the paint. Then the windows looked badly, and after a moment's hesitation at the magnitude of the attempt, she commenced upon them. When they were done, she was sufficiently repaid by their brilliance, and the improved appearance of the room. I'm getting to be a nice scrub, she exclaimed, laughing aloud in the flow of her spirits. Now for the kitchen.

It was no trifling there, it had been so systematically neglected; but industrious, tidy fingers soon made quite a change in that also. Sweeping made room for dusting, that for washing the floor and sink and table. Then the stove looked badly and though she had never polished one,
she had seen it done, and made out very well for a first attempt. That great heap of coal had been staring her in the face all day. She certainly could not think of sifting coal. It was quite too dirty work.
But then Edward had looked rather gloomily at it the night before, and after all, whose business was it if she chose to try? Her hair was covered up, a great apron put before her, a huge pair of gloves put on, and, after a deal of puffing and many stoppages for breath, she had the whole heap finished.
That's bad enough at any rate, she said. But one had said wouldn't kill any body. I'll see that it doesn't get ahead of me again.

It was almost time for the cars, and she had to hurry and dress in time to make tea and set the table. How proud she was of the clean cloth, the bright silver, the nice bread and cake. How she ran backward and forward from the stove, where a fire and steaming tea kettle gave promise of something refreshing for the dining room, all clean and cool and quite ready for the master. He came at length with rather a weary look and an anxious expression on his forehead. For the first time it struck the wife, why should he work so hard, and I sit idly all day, with a servant to wait upon me. The first thing he looked at was the pile of cinders and his face began to clear. She's got some one, certainly, she heard him say. He came into the dining room where she was putting some forgotten thing on the table.

Did you find a girl any where, dear? he asked, sinking into a chair with a sigh of weariness.

Yes; I've got one that's willing, at any rate, she said, bringing in the tea and putting chairs to the table.

You don't say that you've put your own hands to the plough, Alice?

Exactly so, sir. Now come and see how you like the new girl's cooking.

Mr. Weston could not sufficiently praise it, and that praise alone would have paid his wife for a hard day's work. (I wish more gentlemen would praise the bread or the coffee as much as their consciences will admit. It is a wonderful lightener of labor.)
He had never tasted better bread - the tea was just the thing; and he had no idea that his wife possessed such an accomplishment as housekeeping. When they were seated comfortably in the parlor, he acknowledged that he had felt unhappy about the state of things at home, and began to feel that they should have to give up their house, much as he loved it. But if his wife was able to get along for a day or two when she was left and could order servants, they need not go back to boarding again. He would try to go himself to an office the next day, or perhaps she had better close the house and go in.

Mrs. Weston had some new ideas about that, but she kept them all to herself, and merely said she wanted a little resting spell
before she had another girl in the house.
The hint from her neighbor about beginning life with nothing laid up, had been working all day. If they lived up to their income now, what would they do with a family, or in sickness? She began to feel a little uneasy about the matter, and resolved that she would ask her husband how much they spent whenever she could feel at liberty to put such a question.

She was so ambitious to have his breakfast ready for him in season that she couldn't sleep after daylight, and crept out while he was still asleep, to build the fire and put the kitchen in order. One thing she gained by early rising; the vision of that great star that watches the night to sleep, and a taste of the peculiar calm freshness that possesses the morning. That alone would have repaid her for the last nap, but the tender little scolding
she got for being too industrious, the praise bestowed on the coffee, the steak, and breakfast cakes, were worth the whole day's work.
He came back a second time, too, to tell her not to work too hard, and called her precious wife, so that she hardly felt the weight of the dishes she washed. This day the pantries were ransacked and cleaned, the kitchen windows washed, and the chambers nicely swept and put in order. Mrs. Wood came in the course of the forenoon, prepared to assist in some cooking, and our heroine soon found that she could manage quite a pie with but little assistance.

When washing day came, her adviser thought it best for her to employ a woman; and for several weeks the same person came regularly to do the washing; but one day Mrs.
Weston began to compute the expenses of a washer woman for ten years, and made up her mind she would do it herself for awhile.
If I should ever have children, said the little woman, blushing to herself, that money would be nice to put at interest for them. It was wonderful how economical she was growing.
Her husband made some strong objections to this, but withdrew them when she coaxed him to pay her the money that went to the washer woman, and let her do what she chose with it. From that time she used to be up before daylight on Monday morning, and nobody's washing was flying out much sooner than hers. She was tired to be sure, and her hands had lost their delicacy, but there was a sense of their being useful, a feeling of independence, a pride in her husband's praises, and a satisfaction in the thoroughly well performed work too, that were much sweeter than all the pleasures of idleness.

Thus a whole year passed away, and Mrs.
Weston sat down with her husband on the anniversary of the day when she commenced doing her own work, to take a retrospect.
Judging by the first three months of their housekeeping, they would have lived just fifty dollars beyond their income, a contingency which Mr. Weston now confessed had given him no little trouble. As it was, they had lived three hundred dollars within the line, which he had an excellent chance to invest, with his wife's permission, he said smiling, for he considered that hers. The house was uninjured, so that the landlord had made some improvements in the garden, because they were such good tenants. There were no dishes or housekeeping articles to be replaced - not so large a bill for clothing, for of course the lady mistress could not wear such a variety of silks when she stayed at home most of the time. Their table had been better served than that of the boarding house where they had spent a year - their friends had been quite as well entertained, and if Mrs. Weston had read fewer novels,
she had begun to cultivate a taste for reading of a higher order, and found time to read quite as much as she could digest. The change, too, had had a very beneficial effect upon her husband. He had thought that he could not wear clothing in the least defaced.
Now that his wife, with Mrs. Wood's assistance, had learned to sponge pantaloons and coats until they were almost new again, he got double wear from them. The cigars and occasional ice cream were entirely given up to bring home a bouquet for his wife, or to take her out to ride some times.

And in short, my dear Mr. Weston said, stepping his face down very close to his wife's, I thought I was getting a woman, and I find I've married an angel.

Ladies whose husbands live upon a salary that may fail at any time, the moral of this belongs to you. - Flag of our Union.

South Carolina and Massachusetts.

South Carolina and Massachusetts were not always antagonistic. They have exchanged compliments and tokens of good will frequently. In 1788 South Carolina gave her 7 electoral votes to George Washington of Virginia for President, and 1 to John Hancock of Massachusetts, for Vice President. In 1792 South Carolina gave her 8 electoral votes to George Washington of Virginia for President, and 7 to John Adams of Massachusetts for Vice President. In 1796 Massachusetts gave her 16 electoral votes to John Adams of Massachusetts for President, and 13 to Thomas Pinckney of South Carolina for Vice President. In 1800 Massachusetts gave her 16 electoral votes to John Adams of Massachusetts for President, and 16 to C. C. Pinckney of South Carolina
for Vice President. In 1808 Massachusetts gave her 19 electoral votes to C. C. Pinckney of South Carolina for President, and 19 to Rufus King of New York for Vice President.
In 1812 South Carolina gave 11 electoral votes to James Madison of Virginia for President, and 11 to Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts
for Vice President. In 1824 Massachusetts gave her 15 electoral votes to John Q.
Adams of Massachusetts for President, and 15 to John C. Calhoun of South Carolina for Vice President. In 1832 South Carolina gave her 11 votes to John Floyd of Virginia for President, and 11 to Henry Lee of Massachusetts for Vice President.

Long and Short Days.

At Berlin and London the longest day has sixteen hours and a half; at Stockholm the longest day has eighteen hours and a half;
at Hamburg the longest day has seventeen hours, and the shortest seven; at St. Peters-burgh, the longest day has nineteen, and the shortest five hours; at Tornea, in Finland, the longest day has twenty-one hours and a half, and the shortest two hours and a half;
at Wandersborg, in Norway, the day lasts from the 21st of May to the 22d of July, without interruption; and at Spitzbergen, the longest day is three months and a half.

sioners, Mason and Sidel, to the British.

An Incident in Traveling.

[The following thrilling incident, written for the Home Journal, by N. P. Willis, may be interesting to our readers if we inform them that the unfortunate lady is a daughter of a well-known resident of Quincy.]

Starting from New York for Washington, to go through by daylight, I was one of the unsmiling few who went on board the ferry boat to cross to the Hoboken side, a little before sunrise on a chilly December morning. A very delicate and refined looking lady, with two children, arrived just in time for the starting of the boat; but, the lady stepping back to the baggage-room for a forgotten parcel, was unfortunately "left."
A slight scream of dismay from the elder child drew my attention to the drama of real life which was performing so hurriedly, and I began to take an interest in the situations and probable sequel.

A most earnest and sincere looking little girl, eight or nine years of age, had thus the sole charge of an infant boy of perhaps a year or eighteen months. By the carpet bags and bundles they were prepared for a long journey, and were evidently going over to take the early train southward. I saw, at once, as she stood and looked despairingly at her mother, who was motionless upon the wharf we were leaving, that the little sufferer comprehended fully the embarrassment of the case had hard work to choke down the tears and outcries - but there was another thing to be cared for. The boy was holding out his hands to the mother from whom he was borne away, and - come what might - he was to be smiled to! She turned her head aside and gave one convulsive gulp, wiped her full eyes as if nothing were the matter; and then, with a mock laugh and a few broken words of endearment, restored
the little fellow's confidence and courage, while she lifted him to the vacant seat between two strangers. On the instinctive readiness of woman, even in childish grief-ing separation. It was well thought of - but how could the two little ones go on shore, and wait, alone, on the Hoboken side?

With the fear that we should all lose the train, which was about to start with our baggage already in the freight car, I made a hurried statement of the case to the conductor, who obligingly delayed for the arrival of the "one more boat" - this timely kindness fortunately re-united the separated ones.
They were bound for Washington; and I soon found that it was an officer's wife, with his children, going to pay him a visit in his campaign. The quiet little heroine, relieved of her distress, subsided immediately into an attentive nurse, sharing all her delicate mother's cares and anxieties; and, after a long day's observing of her, I mentally made record in my heart that I had seen one more angel! God bless the child, and make grateful the one being who shall be enriched with her devotion in future womanhood.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 18th, 1862.

BURNED BY MASTER, OF PROSPECT AVE.

INCENDIARY. An unoccupied house at Quincy Neck, belonging to Messrs. Sargent & Co., and in former years occupied by Mr. Isaac Newcomb, was destroyed by fire on Monday evening last. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary. We learn that it was insured for eight hundred dollars.

YOUNG ROGUES CAUGHT. Constable W. M. French arrested yesterday several juveniles of the age of twelve to sixteen, for breaking and entering several dwelling-houses in this place. On Thursday night we learn that Mr. Frothingham's mansion on President's Hill was entered; also, on the same evening, a house belonging to Miss Elizabeth Adams, near Chief Justice Bigelow's.

UNFORTUNATE. We learn that a valuable horse belonging to Mr. Galen Bowditch, of this town, died on Saturday evening last, from some unknown cause. The horse on the day of his death had been used but little just before night and appeared then as well as usual.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA. We learn that the cattle plague has made its appearance at Squantum, in the north part of this town, on the farm of Mr. Barnes. In his herd of eight cows two have died of the disease, and two have been killed under suspicion; the lungs of those killed were examined by Drs. Martin and Ellis, of Boston, who pronounced their disease pleuro-pneumonia.

ACCIDENT. Mr. Holmes, President of the Old Colony Railroad, had a very narrow escape from death, recently. He was descending a hill near his residence in Kingston, when his horse took fright, throwing him from the carriage and dragging him some distance upon the ground. He was not seriously injured.

A COMPLIMENT. Corp. Jacob, of the Mass. 18th, in an article written for the Hingham Journal, speaks very highly of the Christmas dinner sent by the good folks of Quincy to Company K. The following is an extract:

"Our army rations are more abundant than in the three months' siege; but we were not a little surprised, on Christmas day, to receive such a dinner from the kind friends of Quincy—turkeys, puddings, pies, and all the fixings; they were most heartily disposed of by the boys, who gave three times three cheers for the town of Quincy, and especially for the fairer sex, who performed the most useful part, and who have sent us mittens, towels, and other needy articles. The day was passed very pleasantly, and in the evening closed with a merry dance, accompanied by music, and officers from the 21 Maine Regiment, who took an important part with us; all went in for a good time generally. Exercises closed at 10 o'clock, when the boys retired, well satisfied with Christmas in camp."

AFFAIRS AT FORT WARREN. The number of guns already in position at Fort Warren is 63. 35 parapet guns are mounted, 30 32-pounders, a sea-shore howitzer and 4 columbiads—4 pounders; 15 flank guns, 24-pounders and 13 casemate guns, 4-pounders. Beside these, there are still 24 guns—8 of them flank guns and 16 columbiads, waiting for carriages.

A MONSTROSITY. A calf having two heads, seven legs, and three eyes, was in possession of Mr. Solomon Talbot of Randolph, a few days since, and we learn he intends to stuff it and have it preserved in the Agricultural Museum in Boston. It lived but a few hours, but many people came together to witness the prodigy, which our informant saw, and pronounced a real curiosity. It weighed 70 pounds!—Transcript.

A CURIOUS MANNING. M. Robin, a new magician, is surprising Londoners by his inexplicable tricks. He has a little manikin which nods, answers questions, smokes a cigar, and kicks its proprietor when it is vexed. More surprising still is an artificial peacock, which spreads its tail, imitates the cry of the real bird, and discovers what ladies and gentlemen have written upon concealed bits of paper.

Gov. Andrew has received a present of $2000 for the use of the families of volunteers, from Massachusetts men in California, together with a patriotic letter.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, JAN. 15, 1862.

The camp of Mars continues to be the theme of discourse. Since my last, the Twenty-Eighth Regiment, Colonel W. Monteth, composed mostly of our Irish citizens, has left for the seat of war. Destination according to programme, Fort Columbus. Its full ranks and soldier-like bearing, made an imposing appearance in Boston. We were in State Street as the gallant Regiment passed, amidst a dense throng of spectators. The inspiring music discoursed sweet melodies of old Hibernia's land. Among the little, but striking incidents, was the sight of a female marching at quick pace on the outside ranks with her husband, a soldier, to the Depot, to be separated only by the flat of the steam engine. Her face was partly hidden, but there was enough left visible to picture her deep grief, that she was soon to part, perhaps forever, with him she held most dear on earth. Alas, the fortunes of war are truly precarious to life and its enjoyments. Some bystanders were unfeeling enough to laugh and jeer at her—but the evidence of her devotedness and fidelity, created a general sympathy in her favor—and well it might with any. The spectacle of devotedness, simple in itself, but speaking much of woman's constancy, aroused, in spite of myself, the acute sensibilities of my nature, inherited from a sainted mother, but possessing not one moiety the goodness of her heart. May this true wife of the soldier live to gladden his return when the olive branch of peace shall dwell once more in our land.

In speaking of war matters, the public sentiment grows stronger daily in favor of more vigorous action. Those among us heretofore the most moderate and conservative, are becoming moody and uneasy from the lethargy of our army movements. For good reasons, the press is forbearing, and the people little disposed to blame outwardly. The spectre of six hundred thousand men in arms, at an expense of fifty millions per month, stares us daily in the face. The country is drifting rapidly into a gigantic debt, that will require generations hereafter to discharge. Even now, financial difficulties are impending; the General Government has in reality suspended payments, and the banks of the country are compelled by lack of public confidence to suspend specie payments when their vaults are full of gold. The country can endure all but a continued strain of its finances; the bottom of the purse will soon be reached, and then where are we?

Our foreign relations are anything but pleasant, growing out of this rebellion. Our superiority in men and money has induced European Powers to predict for us an early victory over the rebels. But with all our power and means, they see we do not succeed; and if a decisive victory is not obtained before long, by our army, we may see England and France acknowledge the Confederacy, raise the blockade, and all with the approving sentiment of civilized Europe. The remedy for us, is an unbounded confidence in the justness of our cause, and an early march upon the main body of the rebels: in plainer words, to whip them now instead of waiting any longer.

The resignation of General Cameron, as Secretary of War, and the appointment of Mr. Stanton, a democrat in his place, is among the strange mutations of the day, and is ominous of great political changes soon to occur.

Our Legislature is slowly progressing in business. Rev. Dr. Jones Walker is elected preacher of the next annual sermon. The Bill to legalize specie payment suspension of our banks until 1st of April next has passed without opposition. A resolve has run through its stages for engrossment, instructing the Governor to inform the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, that Massachusetts assumes, will collect and pay into the Public Treasury, its share of direct tax authorized by Congress.

Fire Department.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

Your correspondent "Amos" throws a little light upon the subject of his remarks, as the engines often throw water on a fire. If he has been long in town he might have seen an engine going to a fire, at the rate of one mile in three hours. He takes great credit to himself because the fires have generally been confined to one house; he could boast much more if that one house was saved. I suppose it will not be denied that the Episcopal Church could have been saved, if there was help at hand in time; also, that the house on Sea street could easily have been saved if the department was as effective as it is expensive. He must also have been a witness of some of the many trials of skill, or muscle, between the different tubs, and companies—when the fire was over, the object being to show that one tub could "wash" the other. If half the strength, and water wasted on these trials, was used upon the fire at the proper time, more houses would be saved, much valuable property would be preserved, and insurance companies would pay more dividends. As it is, it is not much wonder if the citizens sometimes ask, would it not be expedient to disband the Fire Department of Quincy? *

Response from Company K.

I have the pleasure of offering the following communications, hoping that those in particular who contributed so liberally towards providing for the Christmas Dinner for Company K, 18th Regiment, will feel that they have been well paid.

Head Quarters, 18th Reg. Mass. Inf. }
Camp Barnes, Hall's Hill, Va. Jan. 8. }

To W. ABERCROMBIE, ESQ.
Sir: I have neglected to acknowledge until now the receipt of those articles for Christmas which by your exertions, and the liberality of the good people of Quincy were furnished to us. Such kindness to those who are fighting in such a glorious cause, can but meet with its reward. Our heartfelt thanks you have. It was my intention to thank you in person. The leave of absence I sent to head quarters came back with the word approve on it. But a prefix of dis, changed the sense of it so much that it keeps me still on Hall's Hill. When I received them I thought of the time when I hung my stockings on the bedpost, crib, or by the fireside jamb, and awoke in the morning and found them full of a day's rations of happiness.

Out of such kindness the wizard memory conjures up all the riches of the past, with its tender recollections of half forgotten joys. Old hearts grow young, and on the silver head of care, the light of boyhood beams. We need not sing,

"Backward—turn backward! O' time! in your flight:
Make me a child again, just for to-night."

Turn from the stockings that hung by the bedside Christmas eve, to the chubby round face on the pillow in the crib, and faith! Christmas has lost half its power, if the wheels roll not backward across all the years to the cradle, the little old trundle bed, the sled and skates, the fun and frolic, and all the merriment of the Christmas' times, away yonder in the dim obscure. He cannot be a bad man, who loves to give his leisure hours to memory. Yet thoughts like these are the constant companions of our soldiers. As I looked upon our boys that day, and heard each one answer to his name, I made a wish that they might all answer to their name, after this war was over. Yet I believe that if they do not answer to their name here, they will answer to an angel name in that Great Camp above. Again, thanking you in behalf of the Company, as well as myself, and endorsing the letter of your brother, I have the pleasure of being, Yours truly,
J. LEWIS SPALDING, Capt. Com. Co. K.

FROM THE RANK AND FILE.

BROTHER WYMAN: It is of no use for me to try to write a letter to you conveying our thankfulness, for I have no language at my command, much more the power to express on paper the fulness of our hearts; to say that you have made us glad, happy, and I hope better soldiers. You could not but have had joy in your hearts while you were providing for those who received it so joyfully—as for my personal gratifications, nothing could be added to it. I am content. By this last donation, I am doubly assured that there is nothing wanting in our friends at home. It remains for us now to make you proud of us, that you have lavished your gifts on those who will reflect credit on you in return, must be your desire, and shall be our endeavor.

We received the good things which you had so bountifully provided, in good condition; not however in season to partake of them on the happy day you intended, as they did not come to hand till the following night! The delay, however, did not detract in any manner from the anticipated pleasure—as Christmas day was made a Merry Christmas to all by the liberality of our officers. It was well this pleasure was deferred till another day. The articles were divided among the men under the direction of the Captain; each tent, or mess, having its equal share of all; not however till the whole was laid out in state, and underwent the inspection of the officers of our Regiment, including the Field and Staff.

But one question was asked—who are these people that makes the soldier's hearts glad? What a fitting reply could be given—OUR FRIENDS AT HOME! Col. Barnes said, now if you are not good boys Co. K, I shall be ashamed of you after all this.

The fine goose Squire Morton contributed, was presented to the Field and Staff, as the quantity was ample for the men without it. Our Captain will acknowledge in more fitting terms, the liberality of our friends—but I could not refrain from giving you a word from the rank and file.

CHEAP LIGHT. Fernald, on Washington street, has a prime article of Kerosene Oil, which he is selling at a lower rate than ever before offered to the public. It is the Downer brand, and superior to any we ever before burned.

RELIGIOUS. Rev. Mr. Heath will preach to-morrow (Sunday) morning upon working for a penny. In the afternoon the common doctrine of Probation and its practical influence examined. Seats provided for strangers.

DODGE IS COMING. We are pleased to learn that "Ossian," who has been in the far West for the past eight years, is to pay us a visit next week; we are glad he is coming, for during his absence, we have none to fill his place, as there is no other man in the United States, who delineates character perfectly without costume. The citizens of Quincy and vicinity will please take notice, that OSSIAN E. DODGE, the poetic and humorous vocalist, is in New England again, and is to give one of his irresistible Concerts at the Town Hall, on Monday evening next, assisted by William Hayward, the balladist. To illustrate the effect he has produced out West, we clip the following from the Oneonta Gazette:

"The fact is, so irresistible were Mr. Dodge's sallies, and so indescribably funny was he in all that he said and did, that we laughed so uproariously that, in order to give vent, we were obliged to open our mouths so wide that the top of our head was only held on by a small isthmus of skin near the organ of Philoprogenitiveness. We roared all the way to our house after the audience was dismissed, disturbing the echoes, roosters, and the neighbors with our noisy laugh, and after we had retired to bed, so repeated and continued were our cacklings, that our wife's patience at length became exhausted, and she eventually 'dried up' us, by thrusting her night cap down our throat with the end of the rolling pin!

"As a closing remark, we will add that Mr. Dodge's songs and humorous illustrations are free from every thing coarse, low, or obscene, and nothing is presented which can reasonably offend even the religious eye or ear. The highest compliment we can pay Mr. Hayward, is to say, that his singing is the eloquence of music, if such an expression is allowable. His performance was all true to the life, and so exquisitely rendered, that the scenes and incidents of the song seemed to be real things then transpiring and passing under the immediate notice of the assemblage. Mr. Hayward is the best ballad singer in America."

VICER PRESIDENT HAMLIN. One of the most unostentatious men in Washington, (says a correspondent) is the President of the Senate. Mr. Hamlin is comparatively quiet quarters at the Washington House—a very respectable but not fashionable house. He dresses as a New England farmer; his coat of coarse cloth, made by no eminent hand; but all concede him marked ability and a resolution and determination of a high order.

A SAD MISTAKE. What were supposed to be the remains of the son of Capt. Jewett, of Vienna, Ia., were carefully sent home for burial. The family and friends, with the local military, assembled to bury the dead, when the coffin was opened, the face was that of a stranger. The funeral ceremonies however proceeded, and the strange young soldier was buried in the grave prepared by loving parents for their own son.

WOODEN SHOES. There is an establishment at Raleigh, North Carolina, for the manufacture of wooden shoes, which, it is said, is capable of turning out about one hundred pairs of shoes per day. Most of the work is done by machinery, driven by steam. The wood is gune and poplar, which is well steamed before the shoe is made. We understand that these shoes are actually lighter than the leather brogan of the same number, and are very durable. Wooden shoes are worn in the northern part of Europe, and in the same localities in this country; but we suppose that this is the first manufactory of the sort by machinery and steam which has been established.

BARLEY FOR HENS. A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer, says there is no one grain so well suited as food for hens as barley.—Barley when fed with oats and corn, will often be gathered first by the fowls, and hens fed with more or less barley are said to lay more freely. We have used barley and peas mixed, and our return of eggs is evidence of the suitability of the food.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. Our acknowledgments are due to the Hon. Charles Sumner, for his courtesy, in furnishing us with many valuable public documents.

OUR REPRESENTATIVE TO CONGRESS.—Mr. Thomas, our new Member from this District, has generously interested himself in behalf of his constituents, by transmitting for their acceptance many of the last year's Public Documents and those of this Session. They may be had at his office, 31 Washington street, Boston. He also offers his services, to procure any work desired by addressing him at Washington.

Telegraph news of yesterday report that the British steamer Gladiator, with the two traitors, Mason and Sidel, on board, had arrived at St. George, Bermuda, on the 9th instant, and sailed for St. Thomas on the 10th, whence the two rebels would take passage for England.

Twelve fishing vessels belonging to Gloucester, and valued at forty thousand dollars, have been lost the past season. Forty-four lives have been lost during the year.

At the President's Levee, recently, Mrs. Lincoln wore a lace shawl, presented to her by A. T. Stewart, of New York, which cost $2500.

CHANGES IN CABINET. Simon Cameron has resigned the office of Secretary of War, and has been appointed Minister to Russia. Edward M. Stanton of Pennsylvania has been elected to fill the vacancy. Other changes in the Cabinet are expected. There are rumors that Secretary Smith and Postmaster General Blair are to retire.

NEW INVENTION. An improved style of congregate rocket is about to be introduced in the army of the Potomac. This weapon is one of the most fearful that can be devised for setting fire to ships or villages, or for use against compact bodies of cavalry or infantry. They fly with a loud whizzing sound, scattering a shower of fire along their path, and, instead of projecting in a straight line like a cannon ball, they turn sharp corners and shoot off in a different direction like "zigzag lightning." No one can tell but that a rocket speeding past him at a furlong's distance, may turn a dozen angles and kill him the next instant.

UNION VOLUNTEER REFRRESHMENT HOUSE PHILADELPHIA. Our fellow townsman, C. H. Whiting, son of Gardner Whiting, who was attached to the Massachusetts Cavalry Regiment, has written home some graphic descriptions of his journey South. Baltimore he was not pleased with. But there were green spots by the way. With Philadelphia he was enchanted. The hospitality of the "City of Brotherly Love," was gratifying to him in the extreme. The reception the hungry, sick and wounded soldiers who pass through that place, meet with, he speaks of in glowing terms. A House of Refreshment, he says, has been established, by benevolent individuals which will accommodate five hundred persons at a time at the tables, where coffee and other refreshments are gratuitously served up. A suitable room additions, with writing materials, for men and officers. A Bathing House is also connected, for ablution, and where the soldier can fill his canteen with pure water. A hospital likewise, forms a part of the establishment, which has provided for five hundred invalids since its organization in May. These are a few of the features of this truly philanthropic institution, which struck our young soldier at first view.

LEVEE. "There's a good time coming, boys"—and girls, too. See the notice of the Universalist Levee in another column.

Dodge's Social Concert!

The friends of Music, Harmony, Poetry, Patriotism and unaffected humanity, are hereby notified that

OSSIAN E. DODGE,

The world renowned Humorist, Editor, Poet and Vocalist, whose elegant Moral and Humorous, Literary and Scientific Societies for the past twenty-five years, in every principal city and town in the Union have enlisted the enthusiastic commendation of

The Press, the Clergy, and the People, will sing in QUINCY, on MONDAY Evening Jan. 20th, in the Town Hall. On this occasion Mr. DODGE will be assisted by

who is justly styled by the leading critics of New York and Boston as the only Balladist America ever produced.

Doors open at 6 1/2. Concert to commence at 7 1/2.
After an absence from public life of nearly eight years, in the romantic wilds of the far West, Mr. D. returns, with new song and new energy, to his first love—his dear New England Home—to make a last farewell visit to the long tried and cherished friends of his boyhood—then to retire, forever, from public life. That his New England friends may ever remember this visit, as joyfully as himself, is the sincere and earnest wish of his heart.

Owing to future engagements, but one concert will be given, and with this there will be no postponement, let the weather be what it may.

For further particulars see programme, one of which will be left at every house within a mile and twenty rods of the Hall.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Norfolk, ss. Probate Office.

TO the Heirs-at-Law, next of Kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of

POLLY HUNT,
late of Braintree, in said County, Widow, deceased:

WHEREAS, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased
has been presented to said Court, for Probate, by Anna S. White, of Weymouth, in said County, who prays that letters of administration with the will annexed may be issued to him, the Executor therein named in said will having deceased—

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Roxbury, in the County of Norfolk, on the Eighteenth day of January next,
at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And the said Anna S. White is hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, GEORGE WHITE, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this Twenty first day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one.

Mortgage's Sale,

AT AUCTION.

BY virtue of a power of sale contained in a Mortgage Deed made by Henry Snow to Warren Richards, dated October 30th, 1860, and recorded in Norfolk Registry, Lib. 197, Fol. 64, will be sold at Public Auction, upon the premises hereinafter named, in Dorchester, in the County of Norfolk, on MONDAY, the twentieth day of January, 1862, at 4 o'clock, P. M., for satisfaction of said mortgage, said premises, belonging to the First Parish in Dorchester, 67 feet having expired, and for default in the performance of the conditions of said deed—

A parcel of Land in said Dorchester, with the buildings standing thereon, and all the improvements thereon, may be upon said premises, bounded and described as follows: Northernly by land of Stephen Baker, 98 feet 6 inches; Easternly by Ceylon street, 66 feet 6 inches; Southernly by land of Theodore Hersey, 111 feet; Westernly by land of First Parish in Dorchester, 67 feet—containing 69,142 square feet, more or less.

A part of said land is the same that was purchased by said Henry S. Baker, by deed recorded in Norfolk Registry, Lib. 197, Fol. 306, and the other part purchased of said Baker, by deed recorded in said Registry, Lib. 226, Fol.
137.

The premises are subject to mortgage to J. S.
Adams.

DR. M'LANE'S

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC,

OR

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Walter Scott Adlington

At the Brigade Hospital, Camp Hooker, Chick-saw, near Budd's Ferry, Maryland, on the 7th ult., of typhoid fever, Walter S. Adlington, youngest son of F. M. Adlington of Weymouth, Mass., and a member of Co. F., Mass. 11th.

The following extracts are from a letter from
Col. Wm. Blaisdell to F. M. Adlington.

"I can conscientiously bear testimony to uniform good conduct and soldierly propriety on the part of your son.

Not on the battle-field "he died," but still no less a sacrifice to duty; his young life is not without its lesson, and we feel here the cause which numbers amongst its defenders such brave spirits as Walter Scott Adlington must be bleased in its results—ensuring Liberty to mankind.

His country called, his brave young heart
Responded promptly, firmly—here;

Thou' hard from loving friends to part,
He dash'd aside the starting tear.

A mother's kiss—a father's prayer—
To brothers, sisters, friends—adieu;

The stripping laid his bosom bare
In Freedom's cause to dare and do.

His country's call must he obey'd,
And number'd with a gallant band,

With Freedom's holy flag display'd,
He sprang to guard his native land.

And forward, on, as speeds the gale,
To Bull Run's bloody field of woe,

Where balls and shells pour'd down like hail,
The brave young soldier fought the foe.

Repuls'd, reluctant to retreat,
Yet still to duty ever true,

He drag'd along his weary feet,
Resolv'd again to dare and do.

But death came near his quiet camp—
His comrades tried in vain to save—

His eyes are closed, his brow is damp;
They've laid him in the soldier's grave.

And can I write thine epitaph,
My own, my dear lov'd faithful boy;

My aid, my sentinel, my staff;
My hope, and triumph and my joy.

My darling boy, and must you lie
Where traitors feel they plough the sod;

Be still, my heart—beyond the sky
Thy lov'd one's with his Father God.

F. M. A.

The Past Year.

One year—a short and happy year,
Of buoyant hope and tears;

One year—a long and weary year,
Of sorrow and of tears;

One year hath quickly flown to all,
Who on the quicken'd side;

It stole away as silently,
As steals the flowing tide.

One year to youth—whose steps are free
Where life is summer's dream;

With ripples, just to music make,
As flows the silver stream;

One year to age—whose years fast wane,
Whose race is nearly run—

Watching the bright sands passing through
This hour glass, ead by one.

One year the world hath older grown,
Where dear friends long have lain—

Whose tears have fallen on the flowers,
As falls the summer rain;

One year hath quenched the shining light
Of many dark-bright eyes;

And many light feet wander now
Neath more unclouded skies.

One year the world hath older grown,
And loved ones seem estranged;

But in the heart—a temple shrine,
Affection hath not changed.

One year hath blighted many hopes Immortal in their birth;

And souls that soared on eagle wings
Are dropping now to earth.

One year hath gone—a deeper tone
Is blent with music low;

A something o'er my soul hath passed
That thrills me even now.

The past—how many thrilling joys
Have to its regions gone;

That like the tones swept from a lyre,
The sweetest seem when flown.

Anecdotes.

Father, said a cobbler's lad as he was pegging away at an old shoe, they say that trout bite good now.

Well, well, replied the old man, you stick to your work and they won't bite you!

Why, Sarah, I am told that when you met your old "Babe," Mr. J., the other day, he treated you quite beautifully?

Indeed he didn't—blushing, he seemed very glad to see me.

That's what I mean. I understand he gave you a prodigious hanging?

Sarah screamed and fainted.

Julius, was you ever in business?

In course I was.

What business?

A sugar planter.

When was that my colored friend?

Der day I buried dat old sweetheart of mine.

A fox just returning from a continental tour was asked how he liked the ruins of Pompeii.

Not very well, was the reply; they are so drearily full of repair.

Do you like novels? asked Miss Fitzgerald, of her backwoods lover.

I can't say, he replied, I never ate any;

but I tell you, I'm dead on possum

HEBARD'S

PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid!

A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Sperm or Lard Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and in the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps
free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm
and Lard Oils, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market
of late.The above Oil is perfectly clean and free
from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor,
and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it is cheap.Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.State, County and Town Rights for sale,
with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentees.Patent applied for and granted Feb. 24th,

PURE LIQUORS

FOR PRIVATE WINES

USE AND

MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers,
a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say
that our experience of more than FORTY years
as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for
the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us to offer advantages to buyers, that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines
for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling
or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and that every article
sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue
of goods, prices, &c.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 25th. 1862.

BORN BY HON. MASTER, OF PROSECTARE WE

WINTER. If our banks have suspended operations, the bank of Nature continues to discount freely. The fall of snow during the past few days, has been abundant—sufficient, we should think, with fair usage, to last until the end of March. It spread itself very even over the ground, and makes capital sleighing. The music of the sleigh bell, is now eloquent in our streets, and the proprietors of livery stables are having a gala day.

THE CONCERT. OSMAN E. DODGE—the sweet singer, comic actor, and truthful delineator of human character, gave his Concert, per advertisement, at the Town Hall, on Monday evening. The hall, notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather, was well filled. Time does not appear to have impaired the mirth-provoking powers of Mr. D., nor his long absence in the far West, to have rubbed off a single trait of his true Yankee character. He is the same pleasing actor—with such a fund of natural wit and humor, with which he interperes his entertainments, that he keeps his audience in roars of laughter. He can provoke a smile, where there is one to be drawn.

His reception was most hearty and welcome, and would have been more enthusiastic if the evening had been more genial. The fact is, whenever "Osman" issues his card, there are few who feel disposed to "Dodge" the invitation.

DOLLIE DUTTON'S LEVEES IN QUINCY. This interesting little lady gives Levees at the Town Hall, in this place, on Saturday, January 25, afternoon and evening, at 3 and 7-1/2 o'clock. The "Little Fairy" is undoubtedly the greatest curiosity known in the human family; nearly eleven years old, twenty-nine inches high, and weighing only fifteen pounds. Many additions and improvements have been added to the programme of the Levees since her last visit here—and the least of which, are the violin performances of Mr. George Monk, a promising young violinist from our own town, and known to many of our readers, who is said to have made great proficiency in his profession, during the past two years. He has been connected with Miss Dollie's Troupe about two and a half years, and during that time has exhibited his talent before large audiences (and many musical critics) in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Montreal, and other cities and towns in the Northern States and Canada; and has, we learn, been received with much favor wherever he has appeared. Rather a novelty in its way, is his Violin Solo, with the violin in several different positions. At least, we shall have an opportunity of hearing Mr. Monk, and judging for ourselves, and we shall be happy to accord our fellow townsmen the full merit of praise, which his devotion to his profession, and his proficiency in it deserve.

Miss Wilhelmina Kappes, is also announced on the bill, and will sing the patriotic song of "Ellsworth's Avengers" and other ballads.

The prices of admission are in accordance with the times; 15 cents, children 10 cents; children in the afternoon only 5 cents—and no doubt at these prices the hall will be filled.

SINGULAR FIRE. The locomotive Miles Standish was discovered to be on fire a little while after it was placed in the engine house at South Braintree, on Monday evening last. The fire, which probably arose from spontaneous combustion among some cotton waste, was put out by the employees of the road and some other persons, but not until the wood work had been mostly destroyed.

BOUND OVER. The young juveniles arrested last week by Constable French, were tried before Justice Adams, on Saturday, and bound over in the sum of five hundred dollars each, to make their appearance at the Superior Court, to be held at Dedham, in April next. For want of bail they were sent to jail. They gave the following names:—Joseph Maddin, James Lillaway, John Gallagher.

ACCIDENTS. Mr. John McDonald, an industrious adopted citizen of this place, slipped down on Tuesday of last week, and broke his shoulder.

On Sunday, Mr. William Packard, at the Point, we learn, met with a similar mishap.

RECATANTING. James Redpath, a man of some notoriety during the Kansas troubles, and later as the biographer of "Old John Brown," has published a card in the "Pine and Palm" newspaper, renouncing his ultra abolition doctrines in the most decided manner.

RELIGIOUS. Rev. Mr. Heath will preach to-morrow (Sunday) morning upon amusements. In the afternoon—Church-going and the cost of it. Seats provided for strangers.

FREE CHOWDER! A free chowder will be served up to-night, at the Mariposa Bowling Saloon, Johnson's Building.

DORCHESTER ANTIQUARIAN AND HISTORICAL SOCIETY. We learn that the twentieth annual meeting of this society was held on the 10th inst., and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Hon. Edmund P. Tilton.
Curators—Messrs. Edmund J. Baker, Samuel Blake, and Charles M. S. Churchill.

Corresponding Secretary—Ebenzer Clapp.
Librarian—Edward Holden.

Assistant Librarian—Samuel Blake.
Chronologist—Nathaniel W. Tilton.

The report of the finances of the Society gave satisfactory evidence of continued prosperity; and the report of the Librarian showed a rapid and steady increase of the library and cabinet. Both reports were accepted.

ACCIDENTS. One day recently, seven serious accidents occurred at the Charlestown Navy Yard,—one man being instantly killed by the falling of a derrick, and three falling through the hatches of the ship Vermont, breaking their limbs in various places,—one of whom has since died; the others will not prove fatal.

INUNDATION. Telegraphic despatches of the 17th inst., have been received from San Francisco. The State Legislature, in session at Sacramento, had adjourned to the 21st on account of the inundation, to allow the water to subside. The whole city had been under water from two to eleven feet deep. The people were driven into the second stories of their houses, and were unable to build fires or cook food. Cooked provisions were sent up from San Francisco, by two steamers. The water had materially subsided, but the weather was still unfavorable. The whole valley portions of the State have suffered severely from this unprecedented inundation. Millions of dollars worth of property has been destroyed. The Chinese Hongs in San Francisco have received letters from the interior of the State to the effect that during the late freshet nearly one thousand Chinamen were washed off from Long Bar and vicinity on the Yuba, and drowned. It appears that the poor fellows remained in their cabins on the bar, as they had done during previous floods, until the raging waters rose about them and rendered their escape impossible.

THE CABINET. The Norfolk County Journal says: "We trust the changes in this department of government will not stop with Mr. Cameron's removal. The Secretary of the Navy has been concerned in as barefaced a swindle upon the nation as ever was perpetrated—a swindle by which his own brother-in-law received ninety thousand dollars for about four months' services. Mr. Welles should give place to a man who believes less in large commissions."

MASON AND SLIDELL. In Congress a true voice from Massachusetts, in a few words, gives the true state of the case in regard to the British Government:—

"Mr. Thomas of Mass. said it was too much to assume that the country could take another war on its hands, and we must therefore wait. But we are not called upon to say that the conduct of England was manly and just. It was unmanly and unjust. He denied that in capturing Mason and Slidell an insult to the British flag or a violation of international law was intended. He argued that we had a right to do what was done on the occasion. England has done to us a grievous wrong in demanding Mason and Slidell. It was insolent in spirit and unjust. England is treasuring up for herself wrath against the day of wrath, and has placed in the hearts of our people a deep sense of wrong at a time when we cannot respond. But we shall be watching to strike the blow of righteous retribution."

MUSKRATS PREDICT A MILD WINTER. The Milwaukee Wisconsin says it is going to be a mild winter, for Joel Hood, the celebrated antineer, who has been all over the Western Territories, the Pacific States and the Sandwich Islands, and who probably knows as much about the peculiarities of wild animals as any gentleman in the West, stakes his reputation upon the prediction that we are to have a mild winter, with prevailing winds from the south for the next six months. He bases his knowledge upon the doings of the muskrats, beavers and other animals last fall. He also says that it has been reduced to a certainty by scientific and ordinary observations, that whatever winds prevail when the equinoctial line is passed, they will prevail throughout the winter. Last fall it was southern winds, and therefore he is certain they will be the prevailing winds throughout the winter.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for February has been received. It is filled with choice reading on a variety of subjects. Only through the indomitable energy and facilities of the work, can such a work be sustained. The expense of issuing a single number, in round numbers, would amount to a small fortune. No people are so singularly favored, in this respect, as the American people. The works of the best living writers, are re-published through this medium, and afforded at a mere nominal value.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, JAN. 22, 1862.

This has been so far, a dull week in Boston; business operations light and cautious; weather so inclement day after day, as to keep no small number of our population within doors. There is good sleighing here; and this desirable amusement would be sought after more generally, but the low state of business and exorbitant prices our proprietors of livery stables ask for a team, to take an airing for a few hours in the suburbs, prevent many who have the will but not the means to go. The places of public amusement are not liberally patronized. The performance of the Cataract of the Ganges with elephants is progressing at the Boston Academy of Music, and is worthy of drawing full houses. Matilda Heron, at Kimball's Museum, is playing as a star. Morris & Co's. Minstrels have a very attractive bill for the week.

Much of the gossip of the week is the difficulty between Governor Andrew and General Butler. The correspondence of these gentlemen has been published, affording some interesting developments as to military etiquette. General Butler, who is evidently higher in favor at Washington than our worthy Governor, obtained authority some months since to raise regiments for the war without consulting State authorities; and here is where the Governor takes umbrage. Now it appears all this difficulty grows out of the error of the War Department at Washington in putting General Butler in a position whereby the Federal and our State Government are brought in conflict. The law gives to State authorities, the power to raise volunteer troops and to appoint and commission the regimental officers. The analysis of the whole matter in dispute between these high functionaries, would show that Governor Andrew was within the purview of the law, and means to keep there. He has the inside track.

The State Legislature is working slowly at one session a day. The expediency of so altering the 5th chapter of the General Statutes as to oblige the banks to loan six per cent. instead of five per cent. of their capital, is under consideration. A bill has been reported, authorizing to pay out United States demand notes without allowing them to extend their loans. Many petitions daily find their way to the Senate or House, asking for great changes in the laws of the Commonwealth, notwithstanding the General Statutes have just entered upon a new existence, at an immense public expense.

The Quincy Horse Railroad matter is before a Committee of the Legislature. The new Corporation asks for a modification of its powers, relative to the completion of the track, from Quincy line to its proposed terminus in Dorchester. Just and liberal facilities should be offered to the enterprising projectors of this new Railway. Its completion would be a public blessing and benefit. Quincy would have a new channel of cheap communication every hour in the day to State street, Boston. The parties concerned in building the new Railroad, are men of indomitable energy, and will ultimately be successful in their plans—which will injure none, but be pro bono publico in the widest sense. x.

For the Patriot

The Fire Department

To the Publisher of the Patriot: In looking over a copy of your last issue, I saw an article (which I suppose was written by one of our townsmen, although I hate to own that there is such a man in town) in favor of "Disbanding the Fire Department." He remarks:—

"I suppose it will not be denied that the Episcopal Church could have been saved, if there were help at hand in time."

He might as well have said that the Church would have been saved, if it had not been set on fire. In other parts of his article, he refers to our engines going to a fire, at the rate of "one mile in three hours; their trials of skill after the fire was over, to see which tub would 'wash,' and the useless waste of water and strength." It is a great pity they did not take him and give him a good washing; it might, perhaps, have opened his eyes so that he could have seen a little clearer; although, when a man gets into that happy condition, that he cannot tell whether an engine is going at the rate of one mile in three hours, or one mile in fifteen minutes, I pity him, and do not think a washing would do him much good.

He is in favor of volunteer service in case of fire. How would he like it in case his own house should take fire? I mean, the house in which he lives—for I do not believe a man who owns a house is in favor of disbanding the Fire Department.

I should like to know when he has picked up enough volunteers to drag the engine at the fast rate of one mile in three hours, by the time they arrived at the scene of conflagration, whether the fire would be confined to one building, as has always been the case when the tubs have been manned by their respective companies.

NIAGARA.

COUNTERFEITS. Counterfeit fives on the Blue Hill Bank, Dorchester, Mass., are in circulation.

FOR THE BOSTON MARKET! A ton and a half of condemned sugar-cured bacon belonging to the United States, was sold at auction in Augusta, Me., recently, at two and one-eighth cents per pound, for the Boston market.

DISTINGUISHED DEAD OF 1861. The list of the distinguished dead during the past year is not large. Among the sovereigns of the world the losses have been confined to the Sultan of Turkey and the Emperor of China. But far more impression has been made on the public mind by the decease of two sovereigns in the intellectual world—Count Cavour in Italy and Senator Douglas in this country. In, but not of the royal circles, was Prince Albert of England, whose demise has been so lately announced. The loyal army of the United States has lost heavily in the deaths of Col. Ellsworth, Major Winthrop, and Generals Lyon and Baker. The Catholic pulpit loses Lacordaire, the brilliant French orator.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT TYLER. Ex-President Tyler died at Richmond, on Friday night, the 17th inst., after a brief illness. His age was 73. He had been Governor of Virginia and Senator of the United States, and became President upon the death of Gen. Harrison. His death leaves four living ex-presidents, viz: Van Buren, Fillmore, Pierce and Buchanan.

BURNSIDE'S EXPEDITION. All letters for soldiers belonging to Gen. Burnside's Expedition should be directed, as heretofore, to Annapolis, Md., with the addition, "of Gen. Burnside's Coast Expedition." With this addition, they will be forwarded from Annapolis to the expedition, wherever it may be.

THE LEVY. The Universalist Levy, at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, was, in every respect, successful. The truth is, whenever this Society moves they usually carry the town with them. Five hundred tickets, we learn, were sold—and the rush was so great, that the managers were unable to extend the accustomed courtesies to their friends.

NEWBURYPORT. A charcoal pedlar, who was taken from his cart near Newburyport the other day in an insensible state, and apparently dead from cold, on being thawed out at a neighboring house, says the Herald, opened his eyes, and with a confused look asked if anybody wanted to buy charcoal.—That was probably the last thought in his mind before he lost consciousness, and on coming to himself he commenced just where he left off, and was ready for a bargain.

GLEASON'S LITERARY COMPANION. A literary casket, abounding in good things. The number before us is well filled with choice articles—many of them are from the pens of our best authors—fresh, truthful, interesting, and richly illustrated. The Companion is printed on fair paper, eight pages quarto, clear type, and is afforded at two dollars a year. It has a department for almost every variety of reading, and in the family circle would be an invaluable companion, which would be found to improve with acquaintance. Mr. Gleason, in this field of literature, is without a rival: he has long been before the American public as a successful publisher, and they have unbounded confidence in his enterprises. The year commences a new volume, and is a good opportunity to subscribe.

One George Lee, whose property in New Orleans has just been confiscated by the rebels, committed suicide at Bilston Spa, New York, recently. The loss of one hundred thousand dollars caused him to become insane.

Within the past four or five months not less than 250,000 stand of arms have come to the United States from Europe.

PROSPECTUS.

THE BOSTON COURIER—1862.

THE Publishers of the BOSTON COURIER invite the attention of business men, thinking men, and of all who are interested in the various occupations and pursuits of life, to the several editions of their Journal.

For the Union, the Constitution, and the Enforcement of the Laws.

The Boston Daily Courier, Established in Boston, in 1824.

Is issued every Morning (Sundays excepted) and contains the latest intelligence, by telegraph and otherwise, from all parts of the world, with carefully prepared articles on Government, Politics, Trade, Finance and Agriculture, Marine Intelligence, prompt editorial comments on the questions and affairs of the day, Prices Current, Reports of Public Companies, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence, Legal Reports, Reviews of Literature, Art and Music, Agricultural Matters, and discussions of whatever subject is of general interest and importance.

TERMS: EIGHT DOLLARS PER YEAR payable semi-annually in advance. We have reason to believe, that every man of business who has been in the habit of taking the Morning COURIER regards it as an invaluable assistant and companion.

The Boston Semi-Weekly Courier. PRICE REDUCED.

The SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER is of the size of the DAILY COURIER, and is issued every Monday and Thursday. It contains the whole of the Ship News prepared for the DAILY COURIER, and nearly all the general reading matter. Hereafter the SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER will be sent to subscribers at the reduced price of THREE DOLLARS PER YEAR, payable in advance.

The cash must accompany all orders for the SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER, and the paper will be discontinued at the end of the time paid for.

The Boston Weekly Courier.

The Cheap Weekly in New England.

THE WEEKLY COURIER is a complete compendium of the NEWS of the WEEK, and contains the chief editorials, the prices current and market reports, stock quotations, correspondence, and general news matter published in the DAILY COURIER. It also contains an editorial summary of the news of the week, and a great variety of other matter, rendering it in all respects a first class family journal, and particularly adapted to the wants of farmers and mechanics. It has an Agricultural Department, under the supervision of a gentleman of long experience as an agricultural and horticultural writer.

THE WEEKLY COURIER is MAILED IN SEASONS TO REACH ALL PARTS OF NEW ENGLAND ON OR BEFORE SATURDAY OF EACH WEEK.

TERMS—One dollar and a half per year, in advance. To clubs of five or more, to one address, one dollar per copy per year. Twenty copies to one address one year for twenty dollars, and one copy gratis to the person getting up the Club. All subscriptions for the Weekly Courier are discontinued at the expiration of the time paid for.

The Boston Courier Prices Current and Review of the Boston Market.

Printed on a letter sheet, for a reasonable correspondence, is published every Tuesday morning at two dollars and a half per year, or five cents per single copy.

Specimen copies of the above papers sent gratis to any address, on application.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The publishers of the BOSTON COURIER, when in large, and steadily and rapidly growing, makes it at least as valuable a medium for advertising as any other commercial and business newspaper in New England.

The publishers of the COURIER could easily fill their sheet with the unsought and most liberal commendations of the Press, throughout the country. But they prefer that the value of their paper should be ascertained by the public confidence, so well-known and established. They believe it has acquired this reputation by the candor, fearlessness, and independence with which it has been conducted. Through means of extraordinary confidence of ideas on public subjects, and liberty of most unsolicited public trial. It is now, and will be, as heretofore, the supporter of truly national and conservative principles, opposed to all radicalism and fanaticism in whatever form, and devoted to the maintenance of good government, law, order, morals, and religion.

The COURIER earnestly and faithfully upholds the principles of the Constitution as established by WASHINGTON and the Fathers of the Republic. These are now the only basis of our government, and are the only basis of our Union. The Government of the Union, with the aid of the people, must take care of the first—the other must be taken care of by the people of the free States, through the influence and opinion of sound opinions upon questions vital to the very existence of the Republic. This is due to ourselves and our children; and especially the latter should be educated as we and our fathers were, in the Constitutional Union principles. To this great object the COURIER is especially devoted. It has advanced these principles steadily, under every temptation, and often through obstacles and obloquies, such as the signature of a newspaper rarely has to endure. Its friends are friends of the Union, now as ever before—its foes are the open or secret advocates of emancipation, with or without the Union. It is not a mere paper, but a medium of the Constitution and Government of the country.

The publishers of the COURIER conceive, that it thus may render peculiar services; and has peculiar claims upon all men by whom its principles are valued, and who look, by Government means, to promote and secure the Constitutional restoration of the Union. These can best show their sense of our untiring efforts for this great and unparalleled cause, by sustaining this paper in all its business relations.

Poetry.

A Secession Song.

[We find the following poem in the Home Journal, the editors of which paper speak of it as received from a Southern lady. It is good poetry, has real vim in it, and as a curiosity of the times is well worth reading. We copy it accordingly.—Norfolk Co. Journal.]

SOUTHERNS.
You can never win them back—Never—never!
Though they perish on the track
Of your endeavor—
Though their corpses strew the earth
That smiled upon their birth,
And blood pollutes each hearth—
Stone forever.

They have risen, to a man,
Stern and fearless!
They are careless!
Every hand is on his knife,
Every gun is primed for strife,
Every palm contains a life
Ugly and peerless!

You have no each blood as theirs
For the shedding;
In the veins of cavaliers
Was its loading.
You have no such stately men
In your Abolition den—
To march there for and fen,
Nothing dreading.

They may fall before the fire
Of your eagerness;
Paid in gold for murdered hire,
(Bought allegiance!)
But, for every drop you shed
You shall have a mound of dead;
And the vultures shall be fed
In your regions.

But the battle to the strong
Is not given,
When the Judge of right and wrong
Sits in heaven!
And the God of David still Guides the people with his will—
There are giants yet to kill—Wrongs unshriven!

The Lord's Prayer.

"EXPLANATION—The initial capitals spell
"My host is in the glorious Cross of Christ."
The words in capitals when read from the top to bottom and from bottom to top, form the Lord's Prayer.

Make known the gospel truths, OUR father,
King, Yield us thy grace, dear FATHER, from above,
Bless us with hearts WHICH feelingly can sing,
"Our life thou ART for EVER, God of love!"
Assuage our griefs IN love, FOR Christ we pray, Since the bright Prince of HEAVEN and GLORY died,
Took all our shame and HALLOWED the display,
Infant BEING first a man AND then was crucified.
Stupendous God! THY grace and POWER
make known,
In Jesus' NAME let all THE world rejoice.
New labors in THY heavenly KINGDOM own,
That blessed KINGDOM for thy saints, THE choice.

How vile to COME to thee, IS all our cry,
Enemies to THY self and all that's THINE,
Graceless our WILL, we live FOR vanity,
Looming thy very BEING, EVIL in design.
O God, thy will be DONE FROM earth to heaven.

Rejoicing ON the gospel let US live,
In EARTH from sin DELIVERED and forgiven.
O! AS thyself BUT teach us to forgive, Unless IT'S power TEMPTATION doth destroy,
Sare IS our fall INTO the depths of woe,
Carnal IN mind, we are a slumber of joy Raised against HEAVEN: in US no hope can flow.

O GIVE us grace and LEAD us on thy way, Shine on US with thy love and give US
peace,
Self and THIS sin which rise AGAINST us
slay.
O! grant each DAY our TRESPASSES may cease.
Forgive OUR evil deeds THAT oft we do,
Convince us DAILY of THEM, to our shame, Help us with heavenly BREAD, FORGIVE us too,
Recurrent lusts, AND WE'll adore thy name,
In thy FORGIVENESS we AS saints can die,
Since for US and our TRESPASSES so high,
Thy Son, OUR Saviour, bled on Calvary.

Anecdotes.

A squad of Indians volunteered, out scouting, came across an old woman in a log cabin in the mountains. After the usual salutations, one of them asked her:
Well, old lady, are you ecstastic?
No, was her answer.
Are you Union?
No.
What are you, then?
A Baptist, and all's been here.
The Hoosiers let down.

I don't see anything the matter with this plum-pudding, said a fellow at a Christmas dinner.
Well, who said there was, growled his neighbor.
Why, said the wit, I concluded there was,
for you all seem to be running it down!

Papa, has Mr. Smith's eyes got better?
Why do you ask such a question, my boy?
Because I heard mother say that at a party
the other evening, Mr. Smith's eyes followed her all around the room.

Gen. Butler was looking on the map recently when a gentleman asked him where his expedition was going to.
I am looking at the place now, replied the General.
The gentleman couldn't see it.

A little boy of ten years, who had been in the habit of regaling himself on popped corn,
during a beautiful fall of large, feathery snow,
went running to his father, exclaiming:
I know what snow is, papa?
What my son?
It is popped water, papa.

THE SPECIFIC PILL
A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness,
and General Irritability in either sex.

This Medicine, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It is a slow but sure spring of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and strokes the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Sperm-atorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired—
Their effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used
them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years.
I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E.
P. DICKER, M. D.

It is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

HEBARD'S

PATENT OIL!
No more accidents by Burning Fluid!
A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds
of Lamps without chimneys, such as Tide, Sperm or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the great Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not
choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as result generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps
free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm
and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market
of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free
from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant odor,
it is now considered the safest and best Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it
is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.

DR. LA CROIX'S
PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATIES
— ON THE —
Physiological View of Marriage.

250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRA-
VINGS. Price only TWENTY FIVE CENTS. Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union. On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bluishings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling
interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College
Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c. &c.
It is a truthful advisor to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain secret doubts of their physical condition, and who are conscious of having hazarded the health, happiness and privileges to which every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit
in youth, the effects of which are dizziness,
pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in
the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, with many other evils, may be cured by the author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON
TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the knowledge and researches of the most skilled Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of
the many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS
REMEDIES which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may rest assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SE-CRET and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished
us heretofore, as a Physician in our PECU-LIAR department of professional Practice,
for the past twenty-five years.

FRENCH FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish for Medicine, the efficacy of which has been tested in thousands of cases, and never failed
to effect speedy cures without any bad results
will use none but Dr. DeLaney's Female Periodical Pills. The only precaution necessary to be observed is, ladies should not take them
if they have reason to believe they are in certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying
each box) though always safe and healthy,
so gentle, yet so active are they.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

The "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE."
For married ladies whose health will not advance, or who desire to increase their families, may be obtained at a low price, and is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and has been extensively used during the last 20 years. Price reduced to $10.

THE SECRETS OF YOUTH UNVEILED
of "The Cause of Premature Decay," a volume written by J. DeLaney, a book showing the insidious progress and prevalence among youths (both male and female)
of this fatal habit, pointing out the fatality
that invariably attends its victims, and describing the whole progress of the disease, from the beginning to the end.

It will be sent by Mail on receipt of two [3]
cent Stamps.
If Attendance daily, from 8 in the morning till 9 at night, and on Sundays from 2 till

PURE LIQUORS
FOR PRIVATE USE AND WINE MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers,
a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c. and would say
that our experience of more than FORTY years
as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for
the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us
to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly
pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines
for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling
orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and the every article
sent from our house will be satisfactory in every particular. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, in full and complete catalogue
of goods, prices, &c.

 Physical Inactivity.

By ROBT. J. CULVERWELL, M.D.
 The important fact that the awful consequences of Self-abuse may be effectually removed without internal medicines or the dangerous applications of caustics, instruments, moderate blisters, or other empirical devices, is here clearly demonstrated, and the extra-ly new and highly successful treatment, as adopted by the celebrated author fully explained, by means of which every one is enabled to cure himself perfectly, and at the least possible cost, thereby avoiding all the advertised nostrums of the day.
 This lecture will prove a boon to thousands and thousands.

To-Morrow.

Did we but know what lies beyond
 This varied, shadowy vale we tread,
 How often would our souls descend,
 Our eyes the tears of sorrow shed!
 But God, who knows what's best to do—
 Who sees us from his starry throne,
 Has wisely hidden from our view
 That which had better stay unknown.

We walk to-day in conscious pride,
 And hang the flag of hope on high;
 But ah, to-morrow by our side,
 Some friend may lay him down and die;
 Some early flower that won our praise,
 Some altar where we laid our trust,
 Some flower, ere does the evening rays,
 May trampled be, and laid in dust.

Youth dreams of many glorious things,
 As on he lies in pleasure's track;
 Each day some new-born promise brings,
 He turns no eye of sorrow back;
 The flowery fields are all before,
 His eyes on some bright star are set;
 Life is to him a sunny show,
 He'll learn it has its shadow yet.

To-morrow! In its secret shade,
 I little know what is for me;
 I may be with my father laid,
 Or wrecked on dire misfortune's sea;
 But far beyond life's boundary lives
 The everlasting army bright;
 And He alone, who takes and gives,
 Can guide my wandering feet aright.

To Make an Indian Pudding.

Take off the cream from the milk of last night,
 The hot fire will cause it to foam up all right;
 Then stir in the meal—it should be rather thick—
 Then salt it, and spice it, and put the cream in;
 A cupful of sweetening, with raisins a pound,
 And then with the pudding-stick make it ply round;
 It should not be hurried, but boil up all o'er,
 Should stay in the oven three hours or more.
 This make a fine pudding, and one that will do
 For Printer, for Farmer, and President, too.

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.
Jonathan Marsh.

The following memoir of the late Jonathan
 Marsh, of this town, prepared by Dr. Wm. S.
 PATTER, and read before the Genealogical and Historical Society of Boston, Jan. 1st, 1862, has been kindly furnished us for publication.

Mr. Jonathan Marsh, second son and third child of Wilson and Susanna Marsh, was born, April 4th, 1787, in that part of Brain-tree, now Quincy, on the place which had been owned and occupied by his maternal grandfather and great grandfather, and probably by their ancestors, from the early settlement of the town, he passed the greater part of his life, and continued to reside until his death, on a part of the same estate, but a few rods from the house, on School street, now in the possession of the widow of George Faxon; in which he and two of his brothers and three of his sisters were born.

At the early age of seven years, he graduated from the great educational institution of New England—the "Common School." At this age he removed to a farm with his father, in the westerly part of the town, near the head of Granite street. In connection with farming, he commenced to learn the trade of manufacturing coach lace and fringe.
 This was a peculiar and prosperous business, in those days. From the raw material to its final fabrication into nice, fine lace and fringe, all were conducted on the premises.
 The wool fleeced from the sheep, of which a considerable number were kept on the farm, was washed, combed and dyed; after which,
 it was delivered to a large number of women, who would return it in the form of yarn; this was a source of considerable income to those who spun the yarn; they also kept a number of women and girls employed in winding the yarn and weaving the lace;
 which lace was manufactured from the woolen yarn, together with cotton and colored linen thread. Besides supplying material for their own business, they also had a large demand for carded wool from this and the adjacent towns for domestic purposes.
 The music of the spinning wheel was considered in those days as much an accomplishment and refinement as the Piano Forte of the present—and far more beneficial.

At the death of Mr. Marsh's father, his oldest brother, Elisha, continued the business, until September, 1835, when George,
 the eldest son of Jonathan, was admitted as a partner. In January, 1839, Elisha retired from the firm. The manufactory was then conducted by Jonathan and George. In October, 1840, George dissolved his connection with the concern; two years after his retirement, the business was brought to a close, having been superseded by patent power looms. Thus this branch of industry like the iron and glass works has become extinct in Quincy, and passed into the history of the town.

Mr. Marsh was a constant attendant on town meetings, until his infirmities compelled him to remain at home; in which he took a deep interest in advancing and advocating all measures that were for the improvement and prosperity of the town; so attentive was he to the proceedings of these meetings, that if any of his neighbors or fellow townsmen wished to be informed upon any question that had been acted on at these assemblies, they would call upon him for the desired information, which was always cheerfully given them; they, considering him as correct and reliable in his statements as the Town Records.

He always attended very closely to his business, and was very industrious, and continued his employment for many hours in the day. Mr. Marsh never desired, nor would his occupation warrant him in accepting any public office that would take any considerable portion of his time. He sometimes served as one of the general School Committee, and on other committees for special occasions—especially on the committee for establishing the meets and bounds of the present school districts; as he used to say,
 "He would not shrink from doing his share of the public work as far as he could without infringing on his private engagements; that was with him the main point.

Mr. Marsh was for many years a member of the Historical and Genealogical Society, and was greatly interested in all matters connected with this subject—which the two hundred and seventy closely written manuscript pages left by him on historic and genealogical subjects will fully attest. This manuscript book contains an extensive genealogy of the collateral branches of the Marsh family; among which are the following, viz:

Spear, Wilson, Hall, Savill, Gill, Burrell, Danforth, Mayhew, &c. He was frequently called upon by individuals from the various States and Provinces who were in pursuit of knowledge of the earlier families of old Braintree, and all the information he could furnish them upon the subject was freely given—and such knowledge as had been received was considered of the best authority.

 The Historic and Genealogical Register was a source of great comfort to him during his declining days—from which he made copious extracts, and was anxious it should receive a liberal and permanent support.

For many years and up to the time of his death, Mr. Marsh was a member of the First Congregational Unitarian Society of this town—and invariably attended church worship, until his infirmities caused him to remain at home; so great was his desire to be present at his usual devotional exercises, that the last time he went to church, he was an hour and a half going about half a mile.

In 1823 he had a violent attack of rheumatic fever, which left him with a severe bronchial affection; which remained, and was a source of great trouble to him until his death; still he continued to struggle on.
 In 1840, his rheumatic indisposition increased so rapidly, and his limbs having become contracted in such a manner, that he was obliged to yield to the stern mandates of disease, and for more than twenty years he had to remain at home. Last February, his illness increased to such an extent, that it confined him nearly all the time to his bed until his death. For the last six months of his sickness, he was a great sufferer, which he bore with admirable patience and Christian fortitude, when he quietly passed away, December 10th, 1861, in the seven-^{ty}-fifth year of his age.

MARSH FAMILY IN NEW ENGLAND.

It appears that the great part of the Marsh
 in New England, New York and the British Provinces, are descended from one of four ancestors, viz: George Marsh, who settled in Hingham, Mass. in 1635, John Marsh, who was one of the early inhabitants of Hartford, Conn., afterwards removed to Northampton,
 and finally settled in Hadley, Mass., William Marsh, who came from England about the middle of the 17th century, and settled in Plainfield, Conn., about the year 1677, and Alexander Marsh, who came to Braintree, now Quincy, about 1654. This year he was made a freeman, according to the custom of the times. Mr. Marsh, the original ancestor of the family by this name in Quincy, was an extensive farmer by profession, and a large land holder—possessing at the time of his death, about six hundred acres; a considerable share of which had been under cultivation. This estate was located in the north and westerly part of the town. The stock on the farm, was as follows: three yoke of oxen, four three year old steers, eight cows, two heifers, two horses, three yearling calves, fifty sheep, and thirteen swine. After carrying them through winter he had the following amount of grain on hand—eighty bushels of oats, one hundred and fifty bushels of barley and one hundred bushels of corn. He also owned a house and land in Boston. The valuation of his property at the time of his decease, was about £1500. Mr. Marsh was quite liberal in his bequests, having given forty shillings to be distributed among the poor of Braintree, now Quincy.

In connection with the present subject we shall give the amount of property in possession of some of Mr. Marsh's contemporaries, for the purpose of showing the comparative wealth of the early settlers of this town, previous to 1700. Would it not be well to establish a society to collect and preserve the early relics and records of Quincy, as has been the case in other towns?

Mr. Edmund Quincy died January 16, 1798, and Mr. Marsh, the March following. Mr.
 Quincy was considered the most wealthy person in town at that time. He was also a large land owner, his estate was valued at £2073.
 12s. 0d. Mr. Quincy was not a large slave holder, as can be seen by his inventory—which states that he was in possession of but

* Before a member of society could exercise
 the right of suffrage, or hold any public office, he must be made a freeman by the General or Quarterly Court. To become such, he was required to produce evidence that he was a respectable member of some Congregational church. This regulation was so far modified by Royal order in 1664,
 as to allow individuals to be made freemen, who could obtain certificates of their being correct in doctrine and conduct, from clergymen acquainted with them. In 1631, a test was invented, which required all freemen to be church members. Perhaps if this system was adopted at the present time, it might largely increase the number of church members; and we might then witness the novelty of seeing politicians bringing the dear people up to the altar for confirmation, as they now do, to the collectors office to pay their taxes for the purpose of obtaining their votes.

The following is an abstract of the oath
 which will exhibit something of its character:
 "I (A. B.) being by God's Providence an inhabitant and freeman, within the jurisdiction of this Commonwealth; do freely acknowledge myself to be subject to the government thereof: And therefore do here swear by the Great and Dreadful Name of the Everlasting God, that I will be true and faithful to the same."

five slaves; one negro man, one woman and three boys—valued at £100. Henry Adams died 1648; amount of property £75,13s. 0d. Mr.
 Joseph Adams, ancestor of the Adams' of this town, died 1694. Mr. Adams carried on as a source of profit, the malt business in connection with farming. His property at the time of his death amounted to £349,4s. 0d. He married Abigail, the daughter of Gregory Baxter. The said Gregory Baxter, died 7th, 5 month, 1659, of property worth £417,19s. 0d.
 He was the ancestor of the extensive Baxter families of this town, and was a person of a strong will, and liked to have his own way pretty well, as all men do. He was rather more liberal to his son-in-law, Joseph Adams, in the distribution of his property than to his own children. The above Joseph Adams was great grandfather of John Adams, the President, and Samuel Adams, the patriot.
 John and Samuel Adams were second cousins.

Simon Rayes died 1641; amount of his property £122,14s. 4d. John Sheppard died 1650; amount of property £78,6s. 1d.

 £225,17s. 6d. Richard Rockwood died 1660;
 amount of property £33,3s. 4d.

The following direct descent of Jonathan Marsh from Alexander, we have taken from the family record, kindly loaned us by the family.

Children of Alexander Marsh and Mary his wife: Mary was born 24, 12th month, 1658;
 she died before her father Anna, who married Samuel French, died Feb. 4, 1712, leaving numerous descendants. Mercy, baptised 27th, 7th month, 1672; married 29th, 9th month, 1689, Samuel Bass—she probably died before her father, not being mentioned in his will. Rachel was baptised 19th, 2d month, 1674; she married a Mr. Weston, of Weymouth, Mass., as we learn by tradition. Phoebe was baptised 3d, 7th month, 1676; she married a Trill, of Weymouth, and left a numerous family. John, only son, was baptised 24, 1st month, 1679; he married Sarah Wilson, daughter of Dr. John Wilson, the first permanent physician of this town.

Children of JOHN MARSH and SARAH his wife.
 John, born 1700, bapt'd 25th, 5th mo. 1703.
 Sarah, " 30th, 2d " 1704.
 Alexander, " 11th, 11th " 1705.
 [Died in infancy.]
 Alexander, " 18th, 3d " 1707.
 Ambrose, " June 5, 1709.
 Wilson, " Nov. 11, 1711.
 Moses, " Feb. 28, 1714.
 Samuel, " June 30, 1717.
 Edmund, " Sept. 14, 1720.
 [Died when about eight years of age.]
 Mary, " May 6, 1722.
 Ezekiel, " Aug. 3, 1724.

The last two died in early childhood.—
 There is no record of John's death—who is supposed to have died about the year 1740.
 His widow died Sept. 11, 1747, aged sixty-nine years.

Wilson Marsh, the sixth child and fifth son of John and Sarah Marsh, was born, Aug. 16th, (O. S.) 1710; baptised, Nov. 11th, 1711—married Abigail Allen, widow of Jonathan Allen, and daughter of Rev. Experience Mayhew of Chatham, Martha's Vineyard, in 1745. Their children were as follows, viz:

1st. A pair of twins who died in infancy.
 2d. Wilson born, Aug. 10th, (O. S.) 1750
 3d. Jonathan " Apr. 19th, (N. S.) 1753
 4th. Abigail " May 6th, " 1756
 Mr. Wilson Marsh died May 20th, 1798, in the eighty-eighth year of his age. Mrs. Abigail Marsh died April 19, 1799, aged eighty-three years.
 Wilson, second child of the above Wilson and Abigail Marsh, was born Aug. 10th, (O. S.) 1750; married Susanna Savill, July 4, 1781. Susanna Savill, was daughter of Dr. Elisha and Mrs. Anna Adams Savill; born May 12, 1756; their children were as follows, viz:
 Elisha, born July 13th, 1782
 Anna, " June 10th, 1784 Jonathan, " April 4th, 1787
 Ambrose, " Nov. 7th, 1790 Susanna, " Aug. 3d, 1792
 [Died April 6th, 1797.]
 Susanna, Savill, " Sept. 10th, 1794
 Lucretia " Jan. 10th, 1796
 Thos. Mayhew " Aug. 20th, 1799

Mrs. Susanna Marsh died June 1st, 1815, aged fifty-nine years; Mr. Wilson Marsh died July 7th, 1825, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

Jonathan Marsh, second son and third child of Wilson and Susanna Marsh, was born April 4th, 1787; married Sophia Spear, born 13th, 1811; she was daughter of Mr.
 Seth Marsh Spear, born on that part of Quincy called Hough's Neck. Their children were as follows, viz:

George—Ambrose who died in infancy—
 Charles, Edwin Wilson, Jonathan Mayhew, Abigail Spear, Susanna Savill, and Sophia Arnold. The three daughters were triplets. Mrs. Sophia Marsh died Aug. 29th, 1827, in the thirty-seventh year of her age.

Mr. Marsh married for his second wife,
 Mrs. Patience Vose Bailey, widow of Mr.
 Whitman Bailey; she died Aug. 13th, 1841,
 in the fifty-second year of her age.

For the Patriot.
Music Hall, Boston.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

To those of your readers who have never visited Music Hall, Boston, permit me to advise them to do so, the first opportunity they have on a Sunday when some popular speaker is expected to occupy the desk.

The writer of this article took the horse-cars
 at Field's Corner, Dorchester, one pleasant morning, and arrived at the hall about ten minutes before the time appointed for the meeting. The best seats on the lower floor were occupied, and we were obliged in order to get a view of the audience and speaker, to take a seat in the second gallery. In a short time the seats in that vast hall were all occupied.

The people are in the habit of going early to secure seats, and, being economical of time, many take their newspaper with them.
 About two hundred of those present were engaged in reading papers, which were folded and put away as soon as the speaker approached the desk.

It was the 22d of December—Forefathers' day. The conductor of the meeting read that beautiful hymn—

"The breaking waves dashed high."

It was sung by a choir of about twenty persons assisted by the organ. It was sublime. The colossal statue of Beethoven, standing on its pedestal with scroll of music and pen in hand, seemed to listen with dignity and admiration, to the swelling notes of the majestic anthem. And the closing words,
 "what sought they here, Freedom to worship God."

How appropriate to the time and place,
 where talented ministers and laymen of various denominations and no denomination are invited (by the society worshipping there,) to express their opinions on the great religious and moral subjects that interest the human family.

The speaker that day was Massachusetts favorite orator—Wendell Phillips. The subject—"

tracts and for work and materials section and completion of the New house, the balances due to the community to $9050, having been paid during the last week.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Song for the Boys

Lines suggested by John Bull's threat to send the steam clad Steamer Warrior to our shores.

Tune—'Tis my delight in a shiny night.

We fear you not, old Father Bull,
Let your mail'd Warrior come,
We'll find a weak place in her hull,
To lodge a Yankee bomb.
We know you're of the bull dog seed,
But we are bull, also;
By crossing we've improved the breed—
You tried us John, you know.

Chorus.
For Bull to Bull, is Greek to Greek,
And in the tug of war,
Beware, old John, the eagle's beak,
May break the lion's paw.
Beware, old John, the eagle's beak,
May break the lion's paw.

You tried our father's to your cost,
And still you rue the day,
That on our shores your mighty host
Became our eagle's prey.
We know you're old and clumsy, John,
While we are young and spry;
And when you put your armor on,
You'll have to mind your eye.

Chorus.

For Bull to Bull is Greek to Greek, &c

You'll not come near to Bunker's Hill,
And New Orleans you'll shun;
The first you found a bitter pill,
The last a great Bull Run.
You'll not forget that Yankee ship—
The Constitution call'd—
How first she gave your dogs the slip,
And then your blood drenched mud.

Chorus.

For Bull to Bull is Greek to Greek, &c.

If when but in our leading strings,

We crack'd our mighty crown;

Beware the force the striking brings,

Or we may have you down.

We know you have from stem to stern,

And when the die is cast,

That one more lesson you will learn,

Old John, may be your last.

Chorus.

For Bull to Bull is Greek to Greek, &c.

Weymouth, Mass.

Mercy, and not Sacrifice.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

O thou, at whose rebuke and grave
Back to warm life the sleeper gave,
Who, waking, saw the joy above,
A brother's face of tenderest love—
Thou, unto whom the blind and lame,
The sorrowing and the sick came;
The burden of thy holy faith,
Was love and life, not hate and death.

O, once again thy healing lay
On the blind eyes which knew thee not,
And let the light of thy pure day
Shine in upon the darkened thought!

O, touch the hearts of men, and show
The power which in forbearance lies;
And let them learn that mercy now
Is better than old Sacrifice.

Anecdotes.

While walking recently we came up with two negro boys—one carried an apple in his hand, and the other was using all his eloquence to obtain just one bite of it.

Well, said the younger one, finally, I'll give you just one bite; but don't you take more'n jes one bite.

The larger one took the apple, opened a mouth that would have been creditable to a hundred and fifty pound catfish, and brought it down on the fruit, leaving a very small share on the outside.

Gaily, Jim! said the little one, looking at the operation with astonishment, you take the apple and give me the bite!

A laughable incident is told of a nervous man who imagined himself very sick; reports were in the neighborhood that he was given over by the doctor. He was observed early in the day making rapid strides through the streets. His alarmed neighbors met him.

How are you friend?

Sick, very sick.

Where now?

After some one to sit up with me to-night; I am so plagued for watchers that there is no one I can depend upon.

A railroad contractor recently overheard one of his workmen lamenting his hardships since coming to America; drawing, for contrast, a bright sketch of his life in the "old country."

Oh! said the complainant, with a sigh, as I was only back again to me father's parish! Your father's parish, is it? responded a fellow-workman, with a jolly squint of his eye at the distressed "noble scion."

Share an' av ye wor there ye might stian' on the groun' an' reach yer ha' down the chimney and open the door av it!

A housemaid, who was sent to call a gentleman to dinner found him engaged in using his tooth-brush.

Well, is he coming? said the lady of the house, as the servant entered.

Yes, ma'am, directly, was the reply; he's sharpening his teeth.

A doctor went to bleed a dandy, who languidly exclaimed:—

Oh, doctor, you are a good butcher.

Oh, yes, I am used to sticking calves.

HEBARD'S

PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid!

A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds

of Lamps without chimneys, such as

Fluid, Sperm or Lard Oil Lamps, and will

burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps

fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not

choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such

as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps

free from Smoke and Soot by taking off the Candle Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm

and Lard Oils, and is just as safe and harm-

less to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compositions that have been thrown into the market

of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free

from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor,

and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST

Artificial Light for the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it

is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by ex-

press, if desired.

State, County and Town Rights for sale,

with full directions to make, by addressing

the Patentee.

HYPOPHOSPHITES
FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF
Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Dyspepsia, Scrophulous Tendency, Loss of Appetite, Neurasthenia, Female Complaints, and all Disorders of the Nervous and Blood Systems.

This Remedy has obtained a great reputation for most EXTRAORDINARY CURES in ALL STAGES OF CONSUMPTION. It is recommended by many thousand Physicians in the United States and Europe—having been used with RESULTS UNPARALLELED in the ANNALS OF MEDICINE.
The Hypophosphites have a two fold and specific action on the one hand, increasing the principle which CONSTITUTES NERVOUS ENERGY, and on the other, being the most POWERFUL BLOOD GENERATING AGENTS KNOWN. In cases of Nervous Debility, or Prostration of the Vital Powers, from any cause, this Remedy has no superior.

"Winchester's Genuine Preparation"
Is the only reliable form of the Hypophosphites, made after the Original Formula of Dr. Churchill.

SPECIFIC PILL
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness, and Genital Irritability in either sex.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It saps the very springs of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave. From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most aggravated cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excesses.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]
I have found them all that could be desired.—Their effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think these boxes will complete the cure.—E. P. DICKER, M. D.
[?] This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

PRICE—$1 per Box. Six Boxes for $5, by mail, prepaid. For sale by all respectable Druggists, and at the Sole General Depot in the United States, by J. WINCHESTER, Hope.

Hope is like the dawn of morning
Breaking through the misty night,
Each of Nature's works adorning
With a pure and holy light;
Like the gentle evening shower
Scattering fragrance all around,
Opening every little flower
Germinating from the ground.
Let us, then, forever cherish
Hope, to lift our hearts on high—
That our spirits may not perish,
Or our happy dreamings die;
That, when earthly ties are riven,
And we leave this world of care,
We may meet again in heaven,
Each the other's joy to share.

Trip Lightly.

Trip lightly over trouble,
Trip lightly over wrong;
We only make grief double
By dwelling on it long.
Why clasp war's hand so tightly?
Why sigh o'er blossoms dead?
Why cling to fumes and shadows?
Why not seek joy instead?
Trip lightly over sorrow,
The sun may shine to-morrow,
And gently sing the lark;
Fair hope has not departed,
Though roses may have fled;
Then never be down-hearted,
But look for joy instead.

Scraps.

Prudence, through the ground of misery,
Cuts a river of patience, where the mud
swims in boats of tranquility along the stream of life, until she arrives at the haven of death,
where all streams meet.

An American poet talks of the music of a low wind. The wind is often low, and very few of the poets can raise it.

In all our reading we have not often met with a more truly beautiful sentiment than is contained in this toast given at a social gathering in Baltimore: "In ascending the ladder of prosperity, may we never meet a friend."

The certain way to be cheated is to fancy one's self more cunning than others.

The death scale is the grandest thing in the world. It makes the dark pass an arch of triumph into the radiant future.

A little boy being asked "What is the chief end of man?" answered, "The end
what's got the head on."

Mrs. Smirkes says the reason children of this generation are so bad is owing to the wearing of gaiter shoes instead of the old-fashioned slippers. Mothers find it too much trouble to undo gaiters to whip children, so they go unpunished; but when she was a child, the way the old slipper used to do its duty was a caution.

The finest composition of human nature as well as the finest china, may have flaws in it, though the pattern may be of the highest value.

A promise is a just debt, which should always be paid, for honor and honesty are its security.

"Tom," said a girl to her sweetheart, "you have been playing your distress to me long enough. It is time you made known your contentions, so as not to keep me in expense any longer."

Some hearts, like primroses, open most beautifully in the shadow of life.

He that cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he himself will one day want to pass.

The timid man trembles before danger—
the coward dings at the brave man, when it is over.

Happiness grows at our firesides, and it is not to be picked in the stranger's gardens.

Men, after a certain age, never grow older,
but often younger.

A STERN QUESTION. An enraged parent had jerked his provoking son across his knee, and was operating vigorously on the exposed portion of the urchin's person, when the young un did into the parental legs with his venomous little teeth. "Bites! what are you biting me for?" "Well, dad, who be-ginned this 'ere war?"

PALPABLE TRUTH. An exchange apply and truthfully says: "Before you go a shopping, read the advertisements of a news-

How Bob Made and Lost a Fortune.

Mr. Job Financier relates the following account of his son's fortunate success in accumulating and losing a fortune.

My second son, Bob, who set out a few years ago with nothing but a letter of advice, (not a letter of credit) from me; has returned home with a fortune of at least half a million of dollars. To narrate Bob's story would be as good as to write a treatise on banking;
for it illustrates all the art and mystery of these crafty institutions. When Bob arrived at his place of destination, he had not one cent in his pocket, but he so ingratiated himself with his landlady and his washerwoman, that they made no demand for payment for a whole month, and by this time he had established so good a credit with the storekeepers and other substantial residents, that he found it easy enough to pay his board and incidental expenses. When those from whom he borrowed wished to be repaid, he always got the means by borrowing from others. Being an industrious, enterprising lad, and having become an expert at borrowing, he immediately set to work to establish a bank. He found some speculators who were as needy as himself, but not half as knowing, who he easily persuaded to sign a petition to the Legislature for a charter. He was encouraged by others to persevere in this laudable undertaking, as the other bank in the village had become aristocratic and unaccommodating, and would not loan their money to plebeians. Bob borrowed the money to pay the expenses of his journey to the State Capital—borrowed the money to buy the champagne with which he drenched
the members of the Legislature—borrowed the money to pay for the sumptuous dinners and suppers with which he feasted them;
and, finally, after he had got a bill passed exactly to his liking, borrowed the money to carry himself home.

It was amusing enough to hear him relate how he worked himself along—how by treating one member to a bottle of champagne, he thereby ingratiated himself with that member so as to borrow enough from him to treat another member, and so on till he had treated them all round, and then began again. When he got back, he had to borrow money enough to buy blank books, and pens, ink &c.—whereupon the Commissioners might receive subscription for the stock of the new bank. The number of shares being duly subscribed, the first instalment was paid in, in coin borrowed for one half hour from various friends in the neighborhood. Having the example of moral and religious New England before him, Bob had no scruple in swearing that the coin paid in was the property of the bank. At this crisis, a difficulty occurred that was truly alarming.

The engraver who had the bank notes prepared, refused to give them up except for cash. But Bob, whose resources of mind was equal to any exigency, got over this trouble in a way he did not tell me—and then, by buying desks and counters on credit, brought the bank into immediate operation. At first,
the more substantial inhabitants were shy about touching the stock of the bank. By little and little, Bob dispelled their fears.

By circulating his notes at a distance from the bank, he kept them out a long time. By various means, he contrived to accumulate a stock of specie—the whole of which he displayed most ostentatiously on his counter—and then, that it might be generally known how abundant specie was with him, he had his agents out who, under one pretext or another, used to request their friends, as a matter of favor, to go to the bank to get notes exchanged for them. As the silver thus paid out, came back the same day, Bob made a small sum effect a great many exchanges.
By arts like this, the notes of Bob's bank became current in the whole country round,
and he found one dollar in silver quite sufficient to support a circulation of twenty in paper. The more substantial citizens still showed little disposition to touch the stock;
but at the end of six months, the bank declared a dividend of ten per cent, they became so eager to bite, that Bob's first impulse was to sell out, and let them have the whole concern to themselves. A little reflection convinced him that this would be foolish. He, however, as a favor, parted with a few shares to some three or four of the most wealthy, and whose habits were such that he was sure that they would not interfere with his management. By these means,
he increased the anxiety of the others to buy,
and inspired such confidence in the bank,
that all the spare cash in the neighborhood was left with him for safe keeping; being a good politician by trade, he got a good slice of the public and town deposits. Then commenced scenes of unexampled prosperity.
The price of property of all kinds were doubled, trebled, quadrupled. Enterprises of all kinds were invigorated. The whole system of living was changed. The young women forsook their spinning and knitting,

to play upon pianos and dance cotillions.
The young men laid down their mechanical tools and agricultural implements, that they might partake of the gentlemanly recreations suited to their age. The great increase of wealth, and the advance of refinement which accompanied it, pari passu, were, as Bob described it, equally gratifying and astonishing. It really did my old heart good, to hear that a son of mine had, while advancing his own fortune, done so much towards promoting the prosperity of his country.

But who can stand up against the great experiment of a paper government? Even the great "financier" has begun to quail,
after having had all the immense resources of the loyal States to sustain him, and is about to flood the country with detestable paper money, which may come in competition with Bob's bank. What wonder then, that Bob's bank, which began business without any capital at all, should be brought into straits. I do not allude here to its stopping specie payment in common with the other banks of the country; that was a blessing to both the banks and the community. But, through a series of unavailing disasters, the notes of Bob's bank became greatly depreciated, till at length the other banks refused to take them at all, and then they became nothing. Bob was game to the last. He saw the storm approaching when he was the principal debtor to the bank. One by one he drew out all the notes on which he was indebted, by prevailing on the other directors to receive in their place, the notes of other men he had on hand—men, which his enemies say, were men of straw; but Bob, on his honor, assured them, they were all first rate men—and equal at least to the Rothschilds or Astor, up to the very day before that on which they stopped payment. Bob thus got payment of all the notes that were due him, and paid all the debts he owed—leaving him unnumbered, productive property, of the value of five hundred thousand dollars. Bob says one of the causes of the final success of his bank, was, in allowing his bank officers to transact any other speculative business they chose to, on their own hook, as it brought business to the bank, and did not interfere with the interests of the institution.

Bob having retired from financial life, concluded to establish another partnership, of a more genial nature, by borrowing—no,
not exactly borrowing—but taking into himself
a wife. Having found a person to his liking, he "popp'd" the question, and was accepted.
As soon as suitable arrangements were made,
he called upon the parson and had the knot tied. Mrs. Bob now being commander-in-chief, concluded she would try her hand at financiering. Accordingly she had erected a palatial mansion, furnished in the most grotesque and gorgeous manner. She then purchased a coach and four, employed servants in livery, and adorned herself in the most exquisite costume—the materials of which were selected from the most costly articles of fabrication—camel's hair shawl, expensive brocade silks and satins, which were worn but once or twice, and then were thrown aside for the maids, which they fully appreciated. Bob did not like this manner of financiering—and frequently expostulated with Mrs. B. upon the folly of fashion; but it was of no use;
he had to submit to the superior financial accomplishments of his wife. So she continued on giving her sumptuous dinner parties, and champagne suppers, until at last Bob found himself "hard up;" and all his former acuteness in borrowing, could not save him from bankruptcy.

Finally, taking the friendly advice of his creditors, poor Bob went under. After coming up and taking bearings, Bob came to the philosophical conclusion of retiring like many of his predecessors to private life.
Before he took up his residence, however, in this imaginary retreat, he swore eternal vengeance upon extravagant women and credit.

The Burial Place.

What a multitude of thoughts crowd upon us in the contemplation of such a scene!
How much of the future, even in its far distant reaches rises before us with all its perspective realities! Take but one little narrow space of time, and how affecting are its associations! Within the flight of one half century, how many of the great, the good, and the wise will be gathered here! How many, in the loveliness of infancy, the beauty of youth, the vigor of manhood, and the maturity of age, will lie down here, and dwell in the bosom of their mother earth! The rich and the poor, the gay and the wretched,
the favorites of thousands, and the forsaken of the world, the stranger in his solitary grave, and the patriarch, surrounded by the kindred of a long lineage! How many will here bury their brightest hopes or blasted expectations! How many bitter tears will here be shed! How many trembling feet will cross the pathways, and returning, leave behind them the dearest objects of their reverence or their love!—Everett.

George Thompson.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

More than a year ago a writer in the Patriot took occasion to say some very severe things with reference to George Thompson—the English Abolitionist. No doubt the writer was honest in his opinions—but the public have been very much misinformed in reference to the true character of this distinguished philanthropist.

Mr. Thompson has been a member of Parliament, and is distinguished by his eloquence and zeal in the cause of human rights. He has recently delivered several speeches in England in favor of this Government and against the Southern rebellion; using his great powers of eloquence to enlighten the people of Great Britain on the true state of things in this country.

Mr. Thompson recently concluded one of his most eloquent addresses, which occupied
one hour and three-quarters in the delivery, by reciting the following verses, which he had composed when the misunderstanding about the Oregon boundary had occurred with America. The first stanza had been written for the tune—

"God save the Queen," and the others for the most popular national air in America:

O! may the human race
Heaven's message soon embrace:
Good will to man!
Hushed be the battle's sound,
And o'er the earth around
May joy and peace abound,
Through every land!

O! then shall come the glorious day
When swords and spears shall perish,
And brothers, John and Jonathan,
The kindest thoughts shall cherish.

When Oregon no more shall fill
With angry darts our quiver,
But Englishmen and Yankees dwell,
On the far Columbia river.

Then let us haste these bonds to knit,
And in the waste be handy,
That we may blend "God save the Queen"
With "Yankee Doodle Dandy!"

A Wife the Source of Happiness.

Man presides over the warfare of life; to woman it is left to regulate its peace. Man provides the means of subsistence; a woman must provide the means of comfort. There are few stations of life where man is not in some respects a worker, glad to seek rest and cheerful enjoyment when the toils of the day are past.

Whether it be the bustle of business, or the cares of state—the fatigues of sport, or the labor of professional duties to every man
there is given work for the day; to woman it is left to offer him a pleasant home in the evening, or to chase him into dangerous scenes abroad. It is not enough that the easy chair, the warm fireside, the good meal,
are prepared for the master of the house;
bright faces and cheerful words, agreeable amusements and a community of feeling, can alone make the parlor more attractive than the club room or the theatre. To this end, forbearance and love are the necessary agents. Without these, no home can be happy, and the bonds of conjugal happiness are wanting. In a true wife, centre all those sweet and tender affections which bind a man to his companion and his home—the only bliss that has survived the fall.

A Bad Complaint.

The first physician in a certain case was discharged by his patient because he was honest and plain enough to tell the patient that he had a sore throat, and the second doctor, having some hint of the fact, answered the sick man, when questioned, that "his case was highly abnormal and had degenerated into Sympneche Tonselaria."

"Oh, Doctor!" cried the patient, "do say that word again."

"Why, sir, I said that you were at present laboring under Sympneche Tonselaria."

"Why, think, Doctor, that fool told me that I had nothing but a sore throat, and I told him I had no use for such a dunce. Doctor, what did you call it?"

"I told you, sir, in plain terms, that the morbid condition of your system was obvious, and that it had terminated in Sympneche Tonselaria."

"Oh, Doctor, it must be a monstrous bad complaint. Think you can cure me, Doctor?"

"Now, though your diagnosis is clear, your prognosis is doubtful, yet I think by prudent care and skilful treatment you may recover."

"Oh, well, Doctor, do stay all night. I will pay you anything you ask me."

[From the Banner of Light—By request.]

Dr. William Clark.

"Will the spirits give us the true method of cure in cases of eruptive fever?"

This question the attendant spirits of this circle have this day received from one of the disciples of Esculapius—one who is, at all events, in all material points, thoroughly antagonistic to the new found light that is being shed this hour upon the earth. We care not how many intelligent minds on earth, or in worldly degrees of life, declare that they do not believe in the existence of the spiritual plane. They may declare they have no belief in the communion of disembodied spirits, but to us it is only a declaration from the external. There is something in the temple of each nature that declares a probable or real belief in Modern Spiritualism. But according to the material standard of life, we will say that our good brother who has questioned us at this time, has no belief in Modern Spiritualism.

He asks this question when alone, as he supposes—alone; and he says while communion with his own thoughts, "If the desire of my soul is answered at yonder assemblage of spirits and mortals, I will believe." Here seems to be a contradiction between the internal and external. He sends his question to this assembly of spirits and mortals, and desires it to be answered by them. Does this desire come from the external or the internal nature of our brother? For the time being it seems to us he has laid aside the external, and comes to us in the spirit of truth and simplicity.

But to the question: "Can the spirits give us the true method of cure in case of eruptive fever?"

In answering this question, we can only give that which seems the greatest truth to us. There are as many degrees of truth as there are degrees of mind. Each and all are acceptable to God—none are excluded. I have my truth; the friend questioning has his.
So has each individual mind. Now, then, he is to understand that I, as an individual, give that which is truth to me. If it satisfies him, it is well; if not, it is equally as well.

The old mode of treating cases of eruptive fever is fast falling into disrepute, because the spirit land is being too rapidly peopled by those who have been sent forward because of ignorance of true remedies on the part of the medical faculty. We know our brother clings very closely to the old. He believes, honestly, too, that the old truth has served the races well in the past, and he does not know of any new thing that will serve it as well; therefore he says, I am satisfied
there is truth in the old theories, and I am resolved to comply with them. All right, good brother—do so; but when satisfied that there is something better, study it in the name of truth, and you do well.

It may be well to state here that our good brother has at the present time two severe cases of eruptive fever, and he has a fear that their spirits will pass from their mortal bodies while under his treatment. He desires extremely to save them. He says, when alone with his own spirit: "I have tried all the remedies I know of, and they have all proved good for nothing in these two cases;" and while he stands thus folded around with the mantle of death, he sees coming before him only that which he has tried,
and which has proved unsatisfactory to him,
because he does not see that he has acted contrary to nature in the treatment of his patients. Now nature has offered him a solution to the mystery before him, and which will produce the desired result if he will but follow it. There are in the future glorious views of the boons man must yet receive from the hand of the angel-messengers.—
They were veiled from us once, but now are plain to the favored sight—and in particular,
one that we have to give you, that will apply to the cases in question.

Purging, low diet, and poison that may
and may not prove adequate to the disease, which is itself a poison, introduced into the system, have been the method of medical practice in the past; but the present has a more pleasing view, and a more natural method of cure.

We recommend that our questioner, in the first place, sponge the subjects entirely with warm water, then see that they are well manipulated with the hands of some one who has been a victim to but recovered from the same disease. The patients should be kept in a warm room, with about seventy-five degrees of temperature. After this, prepare some nourishing food for them, for this is one of Nature's remedies. The old forms of treatment deprive the body of nourishment, and expect it to live, at the same time. Now the material forces need assistance to regain their lost healthy action, which cannot be gained unless the body is the recipient of a proper amount of nourishment. Begin with well-boiled rice, or oat meal or rye-meal pudding, or mutton broth made very plain.—

Give this to the subject in quantities from a table-spoonful up to a tumbler full containing half a pint. Never fear, our questioner, for Nature demands these remedies, and we know they can be applied with no detriment to the weakened system.

After that, if the tendency is not too great to the brain, give to the patient from a teaspoonful to a wine-glass full of Santa Cruz Rum. Do not fear to do it. If you have let the mortal fires burn so low by the use of your medicines, we know of no better stimulant to keep up a healthy action. Do not forget to keep the room as dark as possible. Negative conditions are required. Light is possitive, and so is the atmosphere, and you will be careful to admit no more of either than is necessary. The patient should be kept warm
—the thermometer being at about seventy to seventy-five degrees—neither below nor above. Observe these simple conditions of heat, and other surroundings, as we have stated, and your patients are saved. Neglect these, and they come to us.

We would here add, that the advice which is designed for these two cases, may answer for the million; and where there are thousands who now enter the spirit-world through the agency of such diseases, there need be only hundreds, at most. If you would always act in harmony with Nature, in the administration of remedial agents, fewer lives would be sacrificed by disease, and the actual pain of disease be greatly lessened.

My good brother may ask who has answered his questions. Tell him Dr. William Clark, formerly of Boston, has responded to his call to-day, and stands ready to answer any other questions he may feel like asking.
We trust, in this, he will be at least honest and true with his own soul, if not with us.

To Detect Explosive Coal Oil.

Many disasters being already occasioned
by the use of explosive coal oil, the following receipt for ascertaining whether or not the article is explosive, may not be out of place:
Pour a small quantity into a saucer, and bring a lighted match slowly down to it. If explosive, the oil will blaze and flash up almost like powder; if not explosive, it will not burn at all. The latter only is safe for use.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The cause of explosion in all such cases is due to the oil assuming the gaseous condition by evaporation, and mixing with about eight volumes of the atmospheric air. The evaporation of the air is dependent upon the temperature of the room, and the extent of surface over which it is distributed. The very light coal and rock oils should be used with great caution for burning in lamps, as they are fully more volatile, and equally as dangerous as the old explosive lamp mixtures of alcohol and turpentine. The burning oils which are most commonly used now, are of a much lower specific gravity, than those that were in common use about eighteen months ago. They are quite clear, clear, free from the fetid smell of old coal oils, and are not so liable to smoke; but these qualities are obtained at the expense of durability—one pint of the old brandy colored oil having given as much light as a quart of the clear light oil.—

Saturday Evening.

Every Saturday evening has, to my ear, a gentle knell. The week tells itself away—one, two, three, four, five, six, and the perfect seven—and I can almost hear the sound dying away as if the days had slipped the cables, and were drifting down the stream,
but beating faint measure as they recede!
And of every one I say, ended; gone, I shall never see thee more! How have I improved them

self, which can, therefore, be used in courts of justice as a legal proof or document, as to dates, contents, &c.; and fourth, as the sheets, envelope, and stamp are one, time and trouble are both saved in conducting a heavy correspondence. These are advantages which must commend to general use.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 8th, 1862.

BORN TO MASTER, OF NOBILITY WE.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS. Florence McCarty and William Young—the latter a graduate, it is said, of our State institutions, and the former a late resident of this town, paid us a visit on Saturday evening last, and made a number of unexpected calls.

The first, was at the shop of Mr. Edwards, on Granite street, which they relieved of a quantity of shoes, the property of the Government, which it would seem they were not in immediate want of, or were loth to have their names classed among other Government delinquents; for they were dropped by the way, where they were found and recovered the next morning. Their next visit was to the fancy dry goods store of Mrs. Susan Reed, on School street; here they went to work very deliberately; after securing their horse, they proceeded to the rear of the building, and with some heavy instrument, forced the fastenings from the door, through which they effected an entrance. The rich goods must have looked very tempting—and they no doubt would have made a fine haul, if an alarm had not been raised—when they sought safety in retreat.

Unfortunately for Mr. McCarty and the enterprise, his partner was well known to the police of Boston, who had always a dislike to Mr. Young's nocturnal adventures—they were, therefore, on their arrival in the city, without ceremony arrested, and the stolen property taken from them—which has since been returned to the owners.

On Tuesday, the prisoners were examined before Justice Adams, of this town. They were defended by able counsel, but the evidence against them was strong enough to warrant their commitment, and in default of $800 bail, they were remanded to the jail in Dedham, for their appearance at the next term of the Superior Court.

THE LEAVES OF MISS DOLLIE DUTTON at the Town Hall, on Tuesday, were fashionably attended: the house, both afternoon and evening, was crowded to overflowing. At the appointed hour, the little lady came forward, and with a most winning smile, made her best courtesy to the audience. Her welcome was most enthusiastic. Miss D. has all the vivacity of the child, with the grace and dignity of the matron. Her features are cast in Nature's perfect mould—with a bright, sparkling, expressive eye—and a voice, as a warbler of song—sweet and melodious; her sylph-like motions in the dance, were graceful as the fawn, and realized our dreams of fairy land. The little elf took our heart captive.

Master Monk, a member of the company, was also in fine humor. He has made great proficiency in his art since his connection with this exhibition. The violin in his hands, is a mere play thing—in any position he can draw from it sweet sounds—and make it speak with feeling, harmony and inspiration; he will be a bright star in the musical galaxy.

The concert, in every respect, was eminently successful; and the wish expressed to be general, that Miss Dollie, at the earliest opportunity, would renew the visit.

THE LUMP OF BUTTER. A case in the Insolvent Court, held in this city last week by Judge White, of Norfolk County, illustrates John Randolph's remark, that "a bankrupt estate in the hands of an assignee, is like a lump of butter in a dog's mouth. The assignee reported that the funds he had collected, amounted to $1300. For his services he charged $700. Judge White cut off $100 of the $700 with one blow of his judicial knife; and then ordered the payment of nearly $250 as interest for four or five years on the $1300. Of course this is nothing but an exception to the general fair-dealing of assignees. Judge White, quite a young man, is entitled to commendation for his independence.—Worcester Palladium.

This is but one case among many, which might be named, where Judge White has arrested the hand of the extortionist, and shown around the widow and orphan, the shield of his judicial influence. The Judge, it is true, is young in years, and young in office; but he brings to it large experience, stern integrity, and sympathy which leans to the side of mercy and the unfortunate, which eminently qualifies him for his onerous duties.

LIBERALITY. Two boys, who found yesterday, a pocket book containing $40 in money and some valuable papers belonging to a store-keeper in the town of South Westmouth, walked two miles to restore the lost property to its owner, and had their honesty approved and encouraged by receiving the munificent reward of a genuine half dime from the liberal store-keeper.—Herald Feb. 6.

OLD COLONY AND FALL RIVER RAILROAD. The Stockholders of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad attended their annual meeting in Boston, January 30th, and according to report, very generally endorsed the action of their officers in the matter of extending the road to Newport.

At their annual election, the following gentlemen were elected Directors for 1862: Alexander Holmes of Kingston, Francis B. Crowninshield of Boston, William J. Walker of Newport, (R. I.) Richard Borden of Fall River, George Kettell of Charlestown, Benjamin Finch of Newport, (R. I.) John R. Brewer of Boston.

AQUATIC. The ceremony of "letting-on" the water of Dudley Pond, or putting that sheet of water in connection with Lake Cochituate, was performed Friday, Jan. 31st. Mayor Wightman, the President and Members of the Water Board, and other officials took part in the ceremony. Dudley Pond is about sixty rods from the Lake, and covers about ninety acres of territory. It furnishes six millions of gallons in twenty-four hours.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS. Orders have been received in Boston to make preparations for returning to Fortress Monroe all the military prisoners at Fort Warren, consisting of 386 rank and file and fifteen officers.

It appears from Washington, that the Government has decided to withdraw the charge of piracy preferred against the rebel privateersmen now in custody, and to place them on a footing with prisoners of war. The following despatch in relation to the decision has been received:

Hon. Alfred Ely, a member of Congress from New York, and late a prisoner at Richmond, had an interview with the President and Secretary Seward, recently, and it has been determined to place the rebel privateersmen, now in New York and Philadelphia, upon the footing of prisoners of war. An order has been issued removing them to military prisons, with a view to their exchange for prisoners of the United States incarcerated in the South. This important and humane course on the part of the Government may result in the return of Colonels Corcoran, Lee, Woodruff, Cogswell, Wilcox, Vogdes, and the other officers now held as hostages for these privateersmen. A general exchange, it is believed, of all the prisoners, will speedily follow.

The magnanimity of the Government in thus frankly withdrawing from a false position which it had assumed through an inadequate appreciation of the crisis, cannot be too highly appreciated. There never was any sufficient reason for stigmatizing the rebel sailors more than the rebel soldiers; and the sooner the distinction ceases, the better. Since the above order was received, it has been so far carried into effect, that the last prisoner at Fort Warren has left for Fortress Monroe, to be exchanged for Union prisoners at the South.

TAX ON NEWSPAPERS. The proposition before Congress, to levy a tax on newspapers of one half cent per copy, has naturally aroused the indignation of the press of the whole country—and they speak a bold and determined language. It is regarded as a scheme to break up the country newspapers and all others who have not a large advertising patronage, and to throw the business into a few men's hands in the large cities. Such a result would bring us round to the same state of things as existed prior to the establishment of the penny press—when the poor man could not afford the luxury of reading a newspaper but once a week. The people have the matter in their own hands, and there is little danger we think, that they will allow a few scheming politicians to make laws for their own aggrandizement, and which will deprive them of the blessing of a free, untrammelled press.

CONTINENTAL MONEY. Mr. Lossing, in his Field Book of the Revolution, gives a scale of the depreciation of the Continental money. In January, 1777, the paper currency was at five per cent. discount. In July it was at twenty-five per cent. discount, and before the end of the year three dollars in paper would not command a silver dollar. In 1778 the paper currency continued to depreciate, so that in April four dollars in paper were equal to one in coin. In September the ratio was six to one, and at the close of the year was five and a half to one. In 1779 the depreciation rapidly continued. In February the ratio was eight dollars and a half of paper to one of silver. In May it was twelve to one; in September eighteen to one, and before the close of the year a paper dollar was only worth four cents. In March, 1780, a paper dollar was worth three cents; in May it was worth two cents, and in December seventy-four dollars in paper was worth one dollar in silver. At this point the historian stops.

EXPULSION OF SENATOR BRIGHT. Senator Bright of Indiana, was expelled from the Senate of the United States for disloyalty to the Government.

The vote stood for expulsion, thirty-two; against expulsion, fourteen—the majority constituting more than the two-thirds vote required.

Letter from Missouri.

The following letter was received by Geo. Newcomb, Esq., formerly of this town, now Principal of the Grammar School, at Mill Village, Dedham, from his heroic son, Geo. T. Newcomb, First Sergeant in Co. E, Third (Mo.) Cavalry, who has been in active service since the beginning of the war; serving first for three months, now for three years. The letter gives a graphic sketch of a sharp engagement at Mount Zion, Missouri:

Palmyra, (Mo.) Jan. 5, 1862.

DEAR FATHER:—Your last letter was received with pleasure, on my return from Boone County. Gen. Prentiss, whose headquarters are in this County, having learned that the rebels had destroyed bridges, and torn up several miles of the track of the North Missouri Railroad, came to the conclusion it was best to punish the rascals. He ordered us to accompany him as his body guard. Now for an account of our march and battle.

On the morning of the 24th day of December we left Palmyra with three hundred and fifty men and a train of six wagons, under the command of our Col. J. M. Glover, all in good spirits. Nothing happened worthy of note the first day. We travelled about twenty-five miles, and pitched our tents for the night. There was considerable snow on the ground, but we obtained hay to sleep on, and passed a comfortable night.

The next morning we were up and off at sunrise for Paris, sixteen miles further, which we reached about three o'clock. We had the town surrounded before the inhabitants were aware of it, and all secured as prisoners. The General told them what had happened to the railroad, and that he must have twenty-five hundred dollars out of the town to help pay for it. We also made some important arrests here. Our tents were again pitched, and so ended the second day.

The next morning we proceeded on our march, and arrived at Sturgeon about dark. Here we found many loyal citizens, who gave us quarters for the night in their houses. We also found here part of Col. Birge's Regiment of Sharpshooters in waiting for us.

The next morning Co. A. was sent out on a scout. About night they came dropping in squads of two to twenty, with the news that they had suddenly come on to a camp of Secesh of about eight hundred, and that their Captain and some of their men were taken prisoners. Orders were immediately given for an early start in the morning.

At two o'clock we were up and in our saddles, ready for a start. The camp was eighteen miles from us. The line of march was formed, consisting of two hundred infantry and the same number of cavalry. Company B led the van, and the remainder of our cavalry in the rear. The advance guard reached the enemy's pickets at sunrise, and commenced firing on them. The conflict begun in earnest. Our Company was ordered up. We made a noble charge down a lane, and sent them flying in all directions. At this point their Major was mortally wounded. We took possession of a house, which we converted into a hospital for the wounded.

I must here relate an exploit of Col. Glover. He came riding down the lane by us with his hat off—a double-barrelled shot-gun under him—a rifle in his right hand and a knife in his left. Waving his rifle he shouted: "Boys, I chased three half a mile and disarmed them!" You ought to have heard the cheers we gave him. He added: "I have found their camp and will lead you to it in a few moments."

The infantry were now sent round behind them; but from some cause but one company went. We mounted and marched on about a mile and a half, and formed in a corn-field to wait orders. Soon we heard the guns of the infantry, and knew they had attacked the foe. Orders were given and forward we went, down the field till we reached the road. Here we dismounted, and attacked them on foot. Into them we went with a relish. Co. E. led the advance. The enemy were down in a hollow in the brush, and we were out on the open road with nothing to protect us. The bullets and shot were flying like hail, but I cannot give you any description of the sound, nor of its effects upon my feelings—one must hear and see, to know. Wounded men were now plenty. We poured our balls into the enemy as fast as we could from our Sharpe's rifles, but still they stood firm; and, in fact, was driving the infantry back; when Gen. Prentiss and our Colonel both appeared in the thick of the fight with words of cheer. "Give them their own game," said the Colonel; "over the fence and into the woods drive them; don't give back!" Over and onward we went. They gave a faint cheer for Price. We answered it with one for the Union, which made the woods ring. They broke their ranks, and ran like frightened deer. We were after them, and soon had possession of Mount Zion church—their camp. We captured ninety-five horses, one hundred and five guns, and thirty-nine prisoners. The enemy lost in killed and wounded one hundred and fifty. Our loss was, three killed on the field, about fifty wounded, four have since died, and ten prisoners, that have since been exchanged.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, Feb. 3, 1862.

The best sleighing we have experienced for many years is improved by its votaries. Boston "Neck" is alive every afternoon with racers; who, judging by their motions accomplish the feat of a mile in two minutes and forty seconds, quite often. Brighton seems to be all the go for sleighing parties; and, if report speaks true, hotel-keepers in that region are reaping a golden harvest. The main thoroughfares of the city wear a lively aspect by reason from the travel of every variety of vehicles on runners constructed by human ingenuity. And yet business is at a low ebb; and confidence, its very life, is diminishing from day to day. Men are afraid to buy and they are afraid to sell to any commercial extent; and, with this state of things, business operations will continually be beautifully small, followed by dissolving views.

Such is the state of financial matters, that the Government and people are in the same ship, and must sink or swim together. The only remedy, to sustain the Federal Government, is direct taxation; but the true basis on which it should be made is still a problem. Some principle of political economy may be devised, that will meet the difficulty. It is safe to say that the burden should fall as equally as possible on all kinds of property, except luxuries.

A war by the State banks to crush the Treasury note bills in the United States Senate, and to oppose the law, making them a legal tender, will lessen any measure of relief that might be offered from a co-operation with the State banks and National Government in giving confidence to the great medium of our exchange, paper currency. The banks, like the people, should continue to sustain the Government through this crisis, dividends or no dividends. For, if in any contingency, the National Government becomes bankrupt, the lesser lights of banking institutions will surely be extinguished. Let the Independent Treasury and Banks pull together for the country's good.

Matters are quietly progressing at the State House. The everlasting Hoosac Tunnel question is again before the Legislature. It was a humbug, ad initio, to attempt to blow through this mountain, composed of solid rock, some two or three miles, for the construction of a railroad track, and no farther State appropriations should be made.

The Bill concerning the reading of the Bible in our public schools, has passed both Houses, and has gone to the Governor for his signature. It designs to favor the fullest freedom of conscience to all, without detracting from that respect and veneration, which is universally awarded to that sacred Book. An effort is making to abolish the State Alms Houses. Experience has shown that they are largely expensive, without the corresponding benefits expected from them—therefore we say—"Let them slide."

PERSONAL. The Hon. Josiah Quincy was ninety years old on Tuesday last, having been born in Boston the 4th of February, 1762. He is confined to his bed by a broken limb, occasioned by a fall a few weeks since, but his health is otherwise good and he is very cheerful.

The venerable City Missionary, Rev. Charles Cleveland, now eighty-nine and eight months old, called upon Mr. Quincy to congratulate him upon his birthday.

MASSACHUSETTS MAN TO BE SHOT.—The Barnstable Patriot, says that Jacob, son of Mr. Jeremiah Baker of South Yarmouth, is reported, is condemned to be shot for desertion from the navy. His parents have received a letter informing them that they can see him before the day fixed upon for his death, and that his body will be delivered to them if desired.

TO BE ANNULLED. It is understood that the contracts let out by Secretary Cameron for over a million of Springfield muskets and over a quarter of a million of rifles and carbines will be ordered to be annulled by Congress. They will not be available in the present war, and as they are to cost on an average of $7 each, above manufacturers' prices, they involve a loss of nearly $9,000,000 to the treasury.

TO THOSE INTERESTED. We are authorized to state that it is entirely useless for town officers to apply to the State Auditor to be reimbursed for expenses in aid of families of volunteers, as no appropriation has yet been made for that purpose, and the Auditor will not probably be authorized to repay such expenses until near the close of the present session of the Legislature.—Bost. Jour. Feb. 4.

A man at Chicago has, after much thought, brought out an invention consisting of two padded cushions, one of which is to be strapped on to the back of the young skater's head, and the other to the back of his coat tails. It is supposed the managers of skating parks will at once order a supply, for when using the cushions, a person may fall ever so hard without cracking the ice.—Boston Post.

The number of births in Braintree for 1861, were 87; deaths, 51.

GEN. ANDERSON. The health of General Robert Anderson is anything but satisfactory. His physicians have ordered him for the present to avoid all undue mental exercise. He is not allowed to engage in any of the public plans, on business even of the simplest nature possible; consequently he is living with his family in the utmost quiet at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, occupying rooms in the most retired part of the building. Notwithstanding the best medical advice and care which the hero of Sumter receives, he still bears with him a careworn look, and it is feared that he may never recover from the strain which was made on his vital energies during the defence of the flag of his country.

CAPTURES DURING TWO MONTHS. The following places have been captured from the rebels since the 7th of November:

Fort Walker and Beauregard, Port Royal, taken in naval action November 7th.

Battery at Braddock's Point, Hilton Head Island, seized by the army November 8th.

Battery at Tybee Island, seized by the navy November 24th.

Fort at Otter Island, St. Helena Sound, seized by the navy November 25th.

Fort at Sam's Point, Coosaw river, seized by the navy November 25th.

Fort at Fenwick's Island, Ashepoo river, seized by the navy November 26th.

Battery at Great Wassaw Island, Wassaw Sound, seized by the navy December 5th.

Rebel Fort at "Red House," Wilmington river, recaptured December 5th.

Beaufort and Port Royal Islands, occupied by General Steven's Brigade, United States army, December 7th.

Ossabow Sound entered and rebel fort on Vernon river reconnoitred by the navy December 11th.

AT HOME AND OUT OF TOWN AT THE SAME TIME. A gentleman has recently changed his residence from Newbury to Newburyport, who in doing so did not move out of the house, or change a thing in it. There is another house similarly situated, in which the dividing line of the towns runs through a bedroom occupied by a man and his wife; and the bed is situated so that the man sleeps in the town where he votes, and his wife sleeps in this city.—Newburyport Herald.

DISEASES INCIDENT TO OCCUPATIONS.—The London Lancet says that there are a quarter of a million of persons living in Great Britain constantly underground in the darkness of mines. The average age of Sheffield workmen is thirty-five years; the average of the dry grinders of needles is very much under this figure. The chief disease among tailors is fistula; among bakers, scrofula and skin diseases—the latter may prevent the floor insects and weevils from irritating the skin of their hands by rubbing them with oil. The most dangerous part of the painter's trade is "flitting"—white lead, turpentine, and closely-heated rooms generate colic; the remedy is sulphuric acid, cleanliness, tubs of fresh water and fresh air—and, as an antidote, the more frequent use of white zinc, or zinc lead.

SHIP KINGFISHER ASHORE. The ship Kingfisher, Capt. Tay, which took out to Ship Island a load of horses for Gen. Butler's division, got ashore near Provincetown, Cape Cod, on Saturday night, while on her return voyage to this port. She struck on Peaked Hill bar during the thick snow, and Tuesday, owing to the change of wind to the NNW, she dragged her anchor and beat over the bar, and went ashore on the beach, with three feet of water in her hold.

THE CONTINENTAL MONTHLY.—This is the title of a new and beautiful Magazine published in Boston, by J. R. Gilmore, under the editorial charge of that distinguished personage, CHARLES GODFREY LELAND. It is devoted to Literature and National Policy. The political department of this monthly contains articles from "the most eminent statesmen of the time." In literature it gives the public the assurance that it will be sustained by the best writers and ablest thinkers of this country. The February number, which is at hand, contains upwards of 100 pages. It is filled with that which is humorous and instructive, and is well calculated to please the weaker as well as the sterner sex.

A. Williams & Co., Boston, Book-sellers and News-agents, No. 100 Washington St., are agents for this new work; and it is also for sale at the store of George L. Gil, in this town.

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE. While proving some guns which had been sent to Fort Independence for that purpose by the South Boston Iron Company, it was discovered that one of them had been spiked. Two men were sent down on Tuesday to drill out the obstruction, and after two hours' labor the gun was again fit for use. It is impossible to discover when or by whom the mischief was perpetrated, but it is supposed it was done on Foster's wharf, where the guns were left a short time last week, previous to being sent to the Fort.—So. Boston Register Feb. 1.

Free Chowders will be served up at the Hancock and Mariposa Saloons this evening.

CAVALRY REINFORCEMENTS FOR PORT ROYAL. The first battalion of the First Massachusetts Cavalry regiment, comprising four hundred and twenty-five men and an equal number of horses, has left Annapolis for Port Royal. The second and third battalions of this regiment left New York a few days ago in five steamers for Port Royal. The regiment numbers more than twelve hundred men, equipped, armed and mounted, and the entire force will be at Hilton Head in a day or two.

MORE ARMS AND WAR MATERIAL FROM GERMANY. The steamship Bavaria, which arrived at New York last week from Hamburg, brought an unusually heavy cargo of merchandise, and nearly two thousand cases of arms and other war material. These cases contain four thousand sabres and over forty-five thousand stand of firearms, besides equipments of various descriptions and samples of arms, which enterprising manufacturers are sending here with a view of effecting sales. A large proportion of the arms in the hands of our troops—especially the guns bought by the agents of the different states for this market—are of German manufacture, and were brought to this port in German steamers almost exclusively.

Rev. Mr. Heath will give a lecture to "Young Women," to-morrow afternoon, in the Universalist Church.

Poetry.

I Would not Live Aways

Many readers will be glad to have us reprint the following grand poem of Dr. Mahlenberg, of which the hymn in our books is a mangled extract.

I would not live aways—live aways below!
O no, I'll not linger, when bidden to go;
The days of our pilgrimage granted us here,
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer.
Would I shrink from the paths which the prophets
Of God, Apostles and martyrs, so joyfully trod:
While brethren and friends are all hastening
Home, like a spirit unloosed o'er the earth would I roam?

I would not live aways—I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm, rises dark o'er the way;
Where seeking for rest, I but hover around,
Like the patriarch's bird, and no resting is found.
Where hope, when she paints her gay bow in the air,
Leaves its brilliance to fade in the night of despair.
And joy's fleeting angel ne'er sheds a glad ray,
Save the gleam of the plumage that bears him away.

I would not live aways—thus fettered by sin,
Captation without and corruption within;
In a moment of strength, if I ever the chain,
Scarce the victory's mine, ere I'm captive again.
Even the rapture of pardon is mingled with tears,
And the cup of thanksgiving with penitential tears;
The festival trump calls for jubilant songs,
But my spirit her own miserie prolongs.

I would not live aways—no, welcome the tomb;
Immortality's lamp burns there bright and the gloom;
There too is the pillow where Christ bowed his head;
O! soft be my slumbers on that holy bed,
And then the glad morn soon to follow that night,
When the sunrise of glory shall burst on my sight.

And the faint matin song, as the sleepers arise
To shout in the morning, shall peel through the skies.
Who, who would live aways? away from his God,
Away from yon heaven, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns.

Where the saints of all ages in harmonious meet,
Their Saviour and brethren transported to greet,
While the anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
And the smiles of the Lord is the feast of the soul.

That heavenly music! what is it I hear?
The notes of the harp ring sweet on mine ear;
And see, soft undulating those portals of gold,
The king all arrayed in his heavenly behold!
O! give me, O! give me the wings of a dove!
Let me hasten my flight to those mansions above;
Aye, 'tis now that my soul on swift pinions
Would soar, and in ecstasy bid earth adieu evermore.

The Best of Husbands

BY JOHN G. SAXE

O, I have a husband as good as can be,
No woman could wish for a better than he!
Sometimes, indeed, he may chance to be wrong,
But his love for me is uncommonly strong!

He has one little fault that makes me fret,
He has always less money, by far, than debt;
Moreover, he waddles now and then,
But excepting that, he's the best of men!

I own he is dreadfully given to drink;
And besides he is rather fond of drink,
Of playing at cards and dice; but then,
Excepting that, he's the best of men!

He loves to chat with the girls, I know,
(Tis the way with men—they're always so)
But what care I for his flirting—when,
Excepting that, he's the best of men?

I can't but say I think he is rash
To pawn my power and spend my cash;
But how can I scold my darling, when,
Excepting that, he's the best of men?

When soaked with tattle, he's hardly polite,
But knocks the crockery, left and right;
And pulls my hair, and grows angry,
But, excepting that, he's the best of men!

Yes—such is the loyalty, I have shown;
But I have a spouse who is all my own;
As good, indeed, as a man can be,
And who could ask for a better than he?

Anecdotes.

George I., on a journey to Hanover, stopped at a village in Holland, and while the horses were getting ready, he asked for two or three eggs which were brought him, and charged two hundred florins.
How is this? said his majesty. Eggs must be very scarce in this place.
—Fardon me, said the host; eggs are plenty enough, but kings are scarce.
The king smiled, and ordered the money to be paid.

I say, Phil, who is the pretty girl I saw you walking with on Sunday evening?
—Miss Hogges!
Hogges! well, she is to be pitied for having such a name.
So I think, Joe, rejoined Phil; I pitted her so much that I offered her mine, and she's going to take it soon.

An emigrant from Ireland, on hearing the sunset gun at a fort, asked of a sailor:
—What's that?
—Sunset, was the reply.
Sunset! exclaimed the astonished emigrant; does the sun go down with such a bang as that?

Will you have a pinch? said an acquaintance, offering his snuff-box to a fish-monger.
—No, thank you, replied the latter; I have just had one from a lobster.

DR. LA CROIX'S
PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATIES
— ON THE —
Physiological View of Marriage.

250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRAVINGS. Price only TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. (Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union.) On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bluishings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c. &c. It is a truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain secret doubts of their physical condition, and who are conscious of having hazarded the health, happiness and privileges to which every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit of youth, the effects of which are diminished power, torpidity, sometimes ringing in the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, with melancholy, may be cured by the author's NEW PARIS and LONDON TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the knowledge and researches of the skillful Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of the many NEW and EFFICACIOUS REMEDIES which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and upon the basis of secure assurance of the same result, assuredly, SECURE and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished us heretofore, as a Physician in our PECULIAR department of professional practice, for the past twenty-five years.

FRENCH FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish for Medicine, the effects of which are dignified, tested in thousands of cases, and never failed to effect speedy cures without any bad results will use none but Dr. DeLaney's Female Periodical Pills. The only precaution necessary to be observed is, ladies should not take them if they have reason to believe they are in certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying each box), though always safe and healthy, so gentle, yet so active are they.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES. Who need a confidential medical adviser, and regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

THE "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE." For married ladies whose health will not admit, or who have no desire to increase their families, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and has been extensively used during the last 20 years. Price reduced to $10.

THE SECRETS OF YOUTH UNVEILED. A Treatise on the Cause of Premature Decay—A solemn warning! Just published, a book showing the insidious progress and prevention of premature decay, and the cause of this fatal habit, pointing out the fatality that invariably attends its victims, and developing the whole progress of the disease, from the beginning to the end.

It will be sent by Mail on receipt of two [3] cent Stamps.

Attendance daily, from 8 in the morning till 9 at night, and on Sundays from 2 till 5 P. M.

Medicines with full directions sent to any part of the United States or Canada, by patients communicating their symptoms by letter. Business correspondence strictly confidential.

Dr. L's Office is still located as established, under the name of DR. LA CROIX, at No. 31 Maiden Lane, Albany, N. Y.

HEBARD'S
PATENT OIL!
No more accidents by Burning Fluid!
As a substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Spirit or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matter, such as is generally found in Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Soot by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Spirit and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.

Caveat applied for and granted Feb. 24th, 1860. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861. The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon. Orders solicited and filled with despatch. Letters promptly answered.

Miscellaneous.

Look Up.

"Misfortunes it has been said never come singly." This was certainly verified in the family of William Thornby. The world had gone prosperously with him for a time, but soon promising speculations failed entirely, and his affairs became suddenly involved. Some hopes of recovery presented themselves, when a fire broke out in the place, his house of business fell a prey to the flames, and almost every article was consumed—and, to render the misfortune greater, the insurance had expired the day before.

Thornby and his large family were reduced to absolute poverty. Nor was this all; his anxiety and exposure during the fire, brought on a fever, and for weeks his wife and daughters hung over him, almost despairing of his life. At length, however, the fever abated, and though he was left weak and helpless as an infant, reason had returned, and nothing was needed for his restoration to health but good nursing and freedom from mental anxiety.

Careful and self-dedicated nursing was not wanting; but it was impossible to prevent mental uneasiness. His children must be supported—but how? They would share with him the poverty, perhaps the disgrace, which the involved state of his affairs would bring upon him; and many would heap upon him unmerited reproach. There remained but one way by which his fair name could be entirely retained, and on this he at once resolved. The house in which they lived was valuable, and would command a ready and favorable sale. It was hard to part with a home he had made so comfortable, but there was no alternative. The house was offered for sale, and a purchaser soon found.

Every just claim was satisfied, and the family removed to a distant part of the country. Here, in a small, neat dwelling, they found themselves in the possession of many comforts, and, in their affection for each other, the mother and children soon found contentment and happiness.

But the father's heart was still sad. He felt a want of confidence in himself, and a mistrust of his fellow creatures. His whole appearance was changed. His countenance was downcast and sad; his steps were lingering and irresolute; and no one would have recognized the once happy merchant in the ill dressed and unhappy looking man, who now busied himself in cultivating a small piece of land that surrounded his little dwelling.

His wife sought by every means in her power to arouse his dormant energies. The little property they had saved from the wreck would soon be exhausted; he was yet in the prime of life—his health was fully restored; why not again go forward, and endeavor to regain a part, at least, of what they had lost? Surely it was a duty he owed to himself and his children. But her husband shrunk from what he deemed a cold, unfeeling world.

It will be vain, Mary, he replied, I shall lose the little we have. You can hardly imagine the unfeeling manner in which the unfortunate are treated. Man will help those who seem likely to rise themselves, but very few will extend a hand to those who are comparatively sinking.

This is pretty true, said his more hopeful wife, but I trust not to the extent which you seem to believe. Place more confidence in your fellow men, and above all, have more reliance on your Heavenly Father, and you will succeed. Begin at the bottom of the ladder; seek a situation as clerk. You are certainly well qualified either for a salesman or accountant, and will, no doubt, receive a salary.

Mr. Thornby sighed deeply. My health, said he, will not permit me to lead the sedentary life of an accountant; and, as a salesman, I fear I should stand but little chance of success.

Not with that sad countenance, indeed; but strive to recover your former cheerful temperament, and all will go well.

For your sake, Mary, and that of the children, I will make the attempt, but feel sure that it will fail.

He resolved to go and seek for employment. He left home for the city with the same sad countenance, downcast look, and slow and measured step.

His wife, who had watched him anxiously until he was out of sight, turned sorrowfully from the window, and said to her eldest daughter:

It is all in vain, Sarah; your poor father will never succeed until he can learn to look up, not only naturally, but spiritually.

After some expression of mutual confidence and affection, the excellent mother and daughter determined upon two things: first, to commend the husband and father to the kind protection of Heaven; and next, to commence together, if possible, the keeping of a small school. This latter plan, however, they determined to submit to the father on his return.

As Thornby approached the crowded city, he felt more oppressed by the doubts and fears which he had urged in the conversation with his wife.

The first place at which he called was the office of a commission agent who had advertised for a person having qualifications which William Thornby felt an undoubted assurance that he possessed. On stating his business, a young clerk requested him to be seated, at the same time surveying him with a contemptuous air.

Half an hour passed, and the employer entered. Thornby's name and application were laid before him. He stood for a moment quietly observing him—and, without waiting to hear the qualifications he was about to urge, said quietly:

You will not answer my purpose, sir. The applicant turned away without remonstrance, and left the office, saying to himself:

Just as I expected. I have every qualification he required in his advertisement; but my appearance does not suit him, and that is enough.

The next trial was at a large wholesale dry goods establishment. The refusal was equally decisive as the other; and as he turned to leave the store, he heard the employer remark to the head clerk:

I make it a rule never to employ a man who looks as if he was unfortunate. Every thing about the man shows that he is going down hill.

And therefore, mentally added poor Mr. Thornby, you will give him a push.

He had resolved not to try again, but the thought of those depending on him urged another trial. With desperate determination, he resolved to go to every warehouse on the street through which he was passing. But he was unsuccessful; and with every failure he became more and more depressed, till his anxious countenance could not fail to excite the observation of those around him.

As he turned from the last shop, he was accosted by a benevolent looking old gentleman in the garb of a Quaker, who exclaimed in a tone of friendly enquiry:

Looking for a situation, friend? Yes, sir, was the reply; can you assist me in my search?

Not directly; but I can give thee a little good advice, which, if rightly acted upon, will finally help thee to attain what thee desires.

I shall be grateful for your advice. It is this—Look Up.

At these words Thornby raised his eyes from the ground, supposing it to be a command to look at his adviser; but, to his surprise, the old gentleman had already turned, and was walking rapidly away in an opposite direction.

Some insane person, Thornby muttered; I am in no humor for his folly.

Then sorrowfully he returned to his own home, quite convinced of the uselessness of further search.

His wife, not much surprised at his failure, still endeavored to cheer him, and proposed the plan of keeping school. With some difficulty they obtained his sanction to what he considered as an almost absurd undertaking.

Circulars were immediately printed and circulated, and Sarah and her mother called upon many families in their immediate neighborhood and made known their intentions. Their very lady-like and pleasing appearance excited much interest, and they soon secured a sufficient number of pupils to encourage them in a beginning. The school rapidly increased and before the end of the term they had more applicants than they could admit. Many families were very anxious that Mrs. Thornby should receive their daughters as boarders. This occasioned an extension of their plan. A larger and more convenient house was taken, the arrangements made for the accommodation of boarders, and also for the reception of a larger number of day scholars.

Mr. Thornby viewed with wonder the success of his wife and daughter. Why was it that he alone should be rejected because he was unfortunate? How was it they had raised so many kind friends around them, eager and able to assist them? In what did the difference consist?

The words of the Quaker often came to his mind; though he had at first regarded them as mere expressions of insanity, he now began to suspect that they in reality contained the advice which the old gentleman had said if rightly followed would insure him success.

Look Up! Surely, man, formed in the image of his Maker, should not, like the beast that perishes, cast his eyes upon the earth. Even when bowed down by misfortune, he should strive to look up to the light which may yet illuminate his path. These thoughts had crowded forcibly upon Thornby's mind, and he was beginning to act in accordance with them, when his daughter bounded joyously into the garden, where her father was busy with some vines, and told her father that he should smile upon her cheerfully as he used to do, for that she had good news to tell him.

You deserve to be smiled upon, indeed, my child, said he, gazing fondly on her animated countenance; but what news have you for me?

One of the young ladies who attended our school asked me to-day if my father was in want of a situation as clerk; and when I answered in the affirmative, she said her uncle requested you to call at his office to-morrow morning. Here is the address, Sarah continued, handing her father a slip of paper.

Well, there may be something yet in store for me, Sarah.

Indeed, there may, my dear father. Only think how well our school is succeeding. The income from that alone would afford us comfortable support. Our Heavenly Father is always near to help us in the hour of our need.

The heart of the strong man was bowed down, and his voice trembled with emotion. Tears of real sympathy stood in the eyes of his daughter, as she whispered:

Your heart will no longer be sad, dear father; you will smile on us once more.

My child, said he, the dark shadow has long been on me; but with the help of God, I will no longer be cast down. Even if the new opening should prove delusive, I will not be discouraged. I will now look up.

With a cheerful countenance, and a step which fell sweetly on the ears of his wife—bringing to her remembrance the days gone by, he descended to breakfast the next morning, and at an early hour was on his way to the city. As he entered the office answering to the address given him by his daughter, he was met by the same benevolent old Quaker who had proffered his advice on a former occasion.

Well, friend, he exclaimed, extending his hand, I am glad that thou hast followed my advice, and learned to look up. I have a situation now at my command, where thee can obtain a good salary, and without working any harder than is fitting at thy time of life.

The best remedy for a man who is going down hill is to look up. When earthly hopes fail, there is still hope in Heaven.

Epitomized Facts.

The number of languages spoken is 4,064. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is thirty-three years. One quarter die before the age of seven; one half before the age of seventeen. To every one thousand persons, one only reaches one hundred years, and not more than one in five hundred will reach eighty years. There are on the earth one billion inhabitants. Of these, thirty-three million three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three die every year, ninety-one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four die every day, seven thousand seven hundred and eighty die every hour, and sixty per minute, or one every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single, and above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct.

Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life, previous to the age of fifty years, than men, but fewer after. The number of marriages are in the proportion of seventy-six to one hundred—Marriages are more frequent after the equinoxes, that is, during the months of June and December. Those born in spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by day than by night. The number of men capable of bearing arms is one fourth of the population.

A Western Verdict.

When a man gets in liquor and goes on the railroad track and gets run over, we think a very good standing verdict like the following would be proper:

A coroner out West recently reasoned out a verdict more sensible than one-half the verdicts usually rendered. It appears that an Irishman, conceiving that a little powder thrown upon some green wood would facilitate its burning, directed a small stream from a keg upon the burning pile; but not possessing a hand sufficiently quick to cut this off at the desirable moment, he was blown into a million pieces. The following was the verdict, delivered with great gravity by the official: "It can't be called suicide, because he didn't mean to kill himself; it was not a visitation from God, because he wasn't struck by lightning; he didn't die for want of breath, for he hadn't anything left to breathe with; so plain he didn't know what he was about, so I shall bring in—died for want of common sense."

Quizzing a Clerk.

A few days ago one of our young ladies who is well acquainted with Worcester's Unabridged, thought she would try one of our clerks, and quiz him whether he were possibly posted in that extensive work. One of the words, which is a synonym of Hoop Skirts, is the word "Farthingale." So the young lady spoken of was out shopping one afternoon, she stepped into one of our fancy good stores with a twinkle of fun in her eyes. Behind the counter was a delightfully polite clerk, who greeted his sly customer with great cheer, and would be "happy to wait on her."

"I am in search of a Farthingale, Mr.—," remarked the young lady, with the sweetest nonchalance possible.

The clerk stammered. Right under his eyes were more than three scores of hoop skirts, seen by both parties of course.

"Farthingales, Farthingales," said the clerk, as his face turned several shades of scarlet, (evidently not knowing whether a Farthingale might not be anything from a full-rigged schooner to a knitting-needle.) "Farthingale, Miss S., we sold the last one yesterday! I am very sorry, Miss S.—will you buy nothing else this morning?"

"No sir, a Farthingale is all I need, I believe. Good morning."

No sooner had the young lady left the store than the clerk turned round to his employer and wanted to know what a Farthingale was. Nobody knew. The last seen of the young man he was in search of a book-store, where he has undoubtedly ere this through the medium of Worcester's Unabridged, solved the hooped mystery of the Farthingale. We doubt not if the young lady makes search at the store for a Farthingale, the clerk will find the stock was not quite exhausted by the sales of yesterday, and will be happy to furnish Farthingales in any quantity.

A genuine touch of woman's, as well as human nature, pervades the following:

A comfortable old couple sat a seat or two in front of us on the railroad car, during one of the hottest days of last summer. Their journey was evidently one of the events of their lives, and their curiosity excited the general attention of the passengers. At a way station the old gentleman got out for a drink, or to buy a doughnut, and heard the bell only in time to reach the door of the eating house to see the train move off without him. The old lady in her seat had been fidgeting, looking out the window in her anxiety for his return, and when she saw his plight, his frantic gestures for the train to stop, as it swept farther and farther away, she exclaimed:

There! my old man has got left! he has! there! see, he has! Well, she continued, sitting back in her seat again, I'm glad on't. It's always been, Mammy, you'll get left, all my life long, and now he's gone and got left, and I'm glad on't.

Her candid reflection on the accident and the evident satisfaction she felt in the fact that it was the old man and not herself that was left, was greeted with a round of applause. Not a few of the ladies in the car were delighted that it was the old man, and not the woman, who had made the blunder and "gone and got left."

Exercise.

Throughout all Nature, want of motion indicates weakness, corruption, inanimation, and death. French in his damp prison leaped about like a lion, in his fetters of seventy pounds weight, in order to preserve his health; and an illustrious physician observes, I know not which is most necessary to the support of the human frame, food or motion. Were the exercise of the body attended to in a corresponding degree with that of the mind, men of great learning would be more healthy and vigorous—of more general talents—of ampler practical knowledge—more happy in their domestic lives—more enterprising, and more attached to their duties as men. In fine, it may with much propriety be said, that the highest refinement of the mind, without improvement of the body, can never prevent any thing more than half a human being.

Taking Cold.

A "cold" is not necessarily, says the Scientific American, the result of low or high temperature. A person may go directly from a hot bath into a cold one, or into snow, even, and not take cold, but by pouring a tablespoonful of water upon some part of his dress, or by standing in a door, or other opening, where one part of the body is colder than another. Let it be kept in mind that uniformity of temperature over the whole body is the first thing to be looked after. It is the uniform circulation of some part. If you must keep a partially wet garment on, it would be well, perhaps, to wet the whole of it uniformly. The feet are a great source of colds, on account of the variable temperature they are subjected to. Keep them always warm, and avoid drafts of air, hot or cold, wet spots on the garment, and other direct causes of unequal temperature, and keep the system braced up by plenty of sleep, and the eschewing of debilitating food and drinks, and you will be proof against a cold and its results.

Winter Work.

Farmers can always find much to do in winter. Though the plough is not moved, or the spade used in the garden, both implements are to be carefully laid where they may be found in the spring, as bright and free from rust as the spoons and knives in the kitchen.

Take good care of farm tools if you intend to do anything in the farming line next spring. Let no rust or mud adhere to ploughs or spades, or forks, if you would have them work well in the spring. If the farm tools are not put in place before they are covered with snow, it will be difficult to find them when wanted, and a farmer not only loses his tools, but his patience, in hunting them up, while his hired men are waiting and wondering where this and that implement were used last in the autumn. Farmers, take good care of your tools.

But the ground is now covered with snow, and tools lie where they fell, till another year. Other work may be done now though the ground is covered with snow.

Cattle must be strictly attended to at this season. They must be fed well, or they will waste their food. They should be carded and coaxed to make them gentle.

As a "merciful man is merciful to his beast," so a savage will treat all in subjection to him in a savage style. Gentleness and kindness should be insisted on by all owners of farm stock.

Cattle will not fatten under a surly and tyrannical keeper. Cows and young steers will ever be troublesome under unkind treatment. The owner of farm stock must attend in person or he will suffer loss from harsh treatment of his animals. Personal attention is to be paid by the owner or he suffers a loss of profits.

And now for the sleds to bring home the wood from the distant lot. Young farmers have a jolly time with their steers, now first subjected to the yoke, in teaching them hane, and gee, and whoa, and back.

The young rogues will be as unruly at first as the young men in our armies; but they can learn, and they will learn rapidly under a good leader. It is right good winter sport to yoke the steers and show them how to bring home wood. While the soldier shoulders his crutch and shows how fields are won, the farmer shows how piles of wood are brought and stored up for the year.—Ploughman.

A Waggish Preceptor.

The late Dr. Wilson, senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, though a very grave man himself, was fond of quizzing and puzzling the country folks who came to inquire after their relatives and friends in the college. One day seeing a man in the court with a letter in his hand, gazing and staring about, and not knowing where to go, he walked up to him gravely and inquired what he wanted.

The man answered:

Can you tell me where to find Mr. Delahunt?

Yes, replied the Doctor; do you see that building before you?

so that she never saw the collector till he had passed her seat. One night she was thus rapt in ecstasy, singing at the top of her voice and gazing at the ceiling.

"Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel," when Jack Bones came along with the plate, and touching the woman with his left hand, said—

Look a-here, aunty, you needn't keep on singing "Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel," 'less you gib something to make it fly.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 15th, 1862.

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

SLIGHTING. We have excellent sleighing and most beautiful weather. This amusement in our fine moonlight evenings, is delightful—full of excitement and adventure, and has a most bewitching influence. So thought Jeremiah Shehan and John Dooner—two of our last young men, as they sat ruminating the thing over, on Tuesday evening last. But how to get on, as neither of them were owners of a team, was the question. But there was a way, Mr. John Hall, near by, had one, and if it were at home, they concluded to take it. They were doomed, however, to disappointment, for they found Mr. H. had locked the stable door, that he might find his horse when he wanted him. The sleigh was on the outside—but a sleigh ride without a horse was not to be thought of. Here was a fix. But it was to be got over. Dooner recollected that Mr. Abram Prescott, not far distant, had a smart horse, for he had occasion often to use him; and if they could get him, with Mr. Hall's sleigh, (here we would remark that Mr. H. was, at the time, sick at home with the toothache, they would have a fine outfit. Accordingly they proceeded to the mansion of Mr. Prescott; cautiously felt their way over the frozen snow to the stable; opened the door which was not fastened—silenced the angry growls of a huge mastiff, which stood sentinel over his master's property while he slept—then put the harness on to the horse—the horse into the sleigh, and away they flew on the wings of the wind toward the city of Boston. In passing through the West District, they made a short call at the Willard House, where they were recognized. Mr. P. was much surprised the next morning on entering his barn to find his horse gone, and more so, after enquiry among his neighbors, he could hear nothing of him. He naturally concluded, as most people would, that somebody had led him off, and might not lead him back, and it was time for him to look after him. He therefore had handbills printed, describing the animal, and offering a reward—which were put into the hands of the police of Boston—and by 12 o'clock, the same day, these two worthies were bagged—one, with the sleigh, in Court street, and the other at a saloon in Federal street—and with the earliest dispatch, were sent over the road to this place, in one of Gay's express trains, to the care and custody of Washington M. French, Esq., Deputy Sheriff. Thus ended their sport, and the greatest sleighing feat of the season.

On Thursday, they were examined before Justice Adams, and in default of bail were committed to the Dedham jail, to await their trial at the next term of the Superior Court. We since learn that Shehan has obtained bail, and was set at liberty yesterday.

DEATH OF A WEYMOUTH SOLDIER. The following extract is from a correspondence of the Roxbury Journal, written at Camp Baker, Chickamton, (Md.) Jan. 21st:

"I am extremely sorry to be obliged to record the death of one of our Company (K., 11th Reg.) while absent on the expedition—Geo. Coolidge, a young man 26 years of age, and who has for the last five years been an honorable and respected citizen of Weymouth. On the third day's march, while the company was at Choptico, he complained of the dysentery. He was left there while the company proceeded on their march. Dr. Dyer remained with him. In a few days he began to get better, but he was taken with typhoid fever and died on the night of the 18th inst. His loss is felt very much in the company; he is remembered as a loved and respected friend and a good soldier. He leaves a wife and child in Weymouth. The boys, wishing to show the last respect they could to their departed friend, procured a metallic coffin, and forwarded the body under the care of his brother (also a member of this company) to his mourning relatives and friends in Weymouth. This makes the second death in our company, and the sixth in the regiment—by disease—since we left Boston."

INCENDIARY ARRESTED. A man named James Kennedy has been arrested for setting fire to a dwelling house in New Bedford on Tuesday morning. The house was considerably injured. After the flames were extinguished, the woodwork of the house was found to be smeared all over with lard, and as Kennedy had been seen by a watchman to purchase eleven pounds of that material, and as he was intimate with the party, a woman named Hathaway, who rented the house, he was apprehended on the charge of incendiarism and committed.

Quincy Horse Railroad.

It appears that the Committee on Railroads and Canals, succeeded in framing a bill, which so harmonized conflicting interests, that it passed to be enacted without opposition. The act increases the capital stock of the company to $150,000; and extends the time for locating and constructing the road one year.

The Legislature, however, declines to prescribe the route in Dorchester more definitely than is expressed in the original charter.—The Selectmen of that town, are required to determine the grades, and regulate the rate of speed, and they are authorized to determine also, as to the filling and excavating for the construction of the tracks.

It was deemed inexpedient to grant a new bridge across the Neponset river, but in case the trustees of the bridge and the corporation should not agree in regard to the mode and terms of crossing the bridge, application can be made by either party to the Supreme Judicial Court, which shall appoint three Commissioners to fix the conditions on which the railroad company shall cross the Neponset bridge with their track.

Thus the interests of the public in the accumulation of the fund, derived from the tolls of those who are now daily contributing for making the bridge free, will be fully protected, without prejudice to the rights of the corporation.

The petition to connect with the Metropolitan Railroad was not granted.

We trust that this community will soon realize the advantages of the successful prosecution of this enterprise, in cheap and frequent facilities for travel, upon an improved and free avenue. Within the limits of Dorchester these improvements, to a considerable extent, have been already made in filling, widening and grading the road. Quite four years have already elapsed since our townsman, William S. Morton, Esq., filed his petition for the institution of those proceedings which have already resulted in extinguishing the rights of the corporations holding the Neponset and Braintree bridges and turnpikes, and funds are accumulating to add the towns of Quincy, Braintree and Dorchester, in the future maintenance of these bridges. The railroad charter, granted him and his associates, for improved means of communication upon those avenues will soon complete the purposes of its projectors.

THE WAR NEWS. Of late, cheering news has come to us from all sources of the success of the Northern troops. The Federal army have advanced up the Tennessee river, taken Fort Henry, and are moving onward into the very heart of rebellion. Later intelligence gives an account of a battle at Roanoke Island, which resulted in a complete victory of the Burnside Expedition—killing and capturing some three thousand of the rebels; and taking all of their gunboats. Elizabeth City was next attacked and burnt. Still later accounts give us information of an attack on the cities of Charleston and Savannah, with good success.

JURORS. Messrs. John Glover and Cliff Rodgers have been drawn as Jurors for the next term of the Supreme Judicial Court, Boston.

ACCIDENTS. On the afternoon of the 7th inst., Terrence McGuire, in the employ of Dr. Storer of Milton, was run over by an ox sled, and had one of his legs broken.

A man named Donell while passing along the streets of Randolph, last Saturday evening, was knocked down by some boys who were coasting, and had one of his legs broken.

Our thanks are due Nosh Cummings, Esq., for the Annual Register of the executive, legislative and judicial departments of the Government of Massachusetts, for 1862; also, a pamphlet containing the discourse delivered by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, before the executive and legislative departments, at the annual election, Wednesday, Jan. 1, 1862.

THE EXPENSE OF A FEW FAMOUS WARS. The war preceding the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697, cost $130,000,000. The war of 1733, settled for Aix la Chapelle, cost $270,000,000. The war of the Spanish Succession cost $311,000,000. The Treaty of Paris, in 1763, ended in a bloody struggle which cost $560,000,000. The war of American Independence cost England and this country $330,000,000. The war of ten years, which is known as the French Revolution of 1793, cost $230,000,000. The war against the First Napoleon, which began in 1803 and ended in 1815, cost the extraordinary amount of $5,800,000,000. The Crimean war cost $840,000,000. The last Italian war—not including the hostilities between Victor Emanuel, Garibaldi, Bomba, etc., cost $45,000,000. Last war in India cost England $35,000,000.

ONE MORE OF THOSE TIP-TOE FREE CHOWDERS. We were served up this evening at the old stand of the Mariposa Bowling and Oyster Saloon, Johnson's Building, which has been fitted up in a neat and convenient manner for the accommodation of its large number of patrons.

A good girl wanted—see advertisement.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, Feb. 12, 1862.

The Legislative records of the week at the State House shows that some items of importance are being considered, and some of not much consequence.

It is proposed that Massachusetts shall expend half a million of dollars for State defence to be reimbursed in the long run, by the Federal Government. A good idea: and if double that sum is appropriated, it would be money well laid out; as our seaboard towns now in case of invasion, are at the mercy of the invaders. It would set thousands at work, now out of employ, and be a good legacy for our children. Thus fortified, we should be in a more favorable condition to give the foe "Jessie."

Our foreign relations show a bad state of things in Europe. Intervention is drifting rapidly toward us, judging from the tone of the trans-Atlantic newspapers. And strange to say, the French horn to raise the blockade is louder than the British bugle.

Massachusetts in the event of foreign invasion, is to depend upon herself as from necessity, we can expect but little help from the Federal Government. Let the action of the Legislature be prompt and immediate on this subject. Banking matters for increase or decrease of capital stock or any other particular favor will get the go-by this session. The much debated bill concerning reading the Bible in our public schools, which I thought had passed last week, by some parliamentary tactics is re-committed for further grandiloquent discussion. The Bill to reduce the number of cattle Commissioners of pleuro pneumonia reputation, has been passed in the House to be engrossed, after an animated discussion, in which Mr. Cummings of Quincy, took an able part with others, in debate.

The protracted war against Southern rebellion is getting to be a costly penny to the Nation. Our National Treasury last week was depleted of its last dollar: poor Uncle Sam, with a pocket as empty as an egg shell; now this is too bad, though Treasury notes can be coined in abundance. The whole Nation sees one thing to save us—that is, action and success. We cannot long support a military camp at an expense of $2,000,000 per day, for the purpose of merely drilling and disciplining an army of seven hundred thousand soldiers; the longer we delay, the stronger shall we find the enemy fortified. Lead our troops to battle now, and the enemy will soon be conquered; the people demand it. Now is the day and now is the hour to save the country.

Among the events of the season, is Mrs. President Lincoln's ball recently at Washington, happening on the very day that Senator Wilson publicly announced in his seat that there was not a dollar in the Treasury. The ladies are discussing Mrs. Lincoln's magnificent robe of thick satin, richly plaited in broad folds over the bosom, and heavy neck lace, ear rings and brooch; the brilliant but select assembly in rich attire, and the ornamental confectionary, that cost its thousands; the joy that reigned throughout, amidst the beauty, fashion and elegant appearance of the guests. Many are unfeeling enough to think that this fête should have been less expensive and more republican in its character, especially as there is so much suffering and sickness in the army, and people without number put to their wits end to obtain a day's work—and at a time, when Washington is protected by military rule from the incursion of a deadly Southern enemy. The State levees of the early Presidents were always plain and unexpensive.

Since dictating the above desultory remarks, the war news from the South looks more cheering for the Union cause. The girdle is contracting the enemy South and West by the onward and successful move of a portion of our army. But where is General McClellan all this time—Oh, where?—The news has given some impulse to business here. In a few days we shall get out of our "winter of discontent," and enter into the more genial season of spring. Labor is getting into better demand; a sure sign of returning prosperity. Trade though small, is more for cash than credit. The indications are, that we are stepping upon better times, and can bear the taxes of rebellion without heavily feeling the burden. Labor is favored by the low prices of many kinds of food, as flour, pork, beef, corn, &c.—Money is plenty for business operations, and likely so to continue. Should the legal tender bill become a law by Congress, the pecuniary condition of the General Government will be placed on a good platform, and receive the sanction of the people—the State banks to the contrary notwithstanding. X.

A CURIOUS COINCIDENCE. Washington and Prince Albert died in the same month, and on the same day of the month and about the same hour in the evening—14th December—1799 and 1861.

HANCOCK SALOON. There will be a Free Chowder this evening. All lovers of oysters should remember that this bivalve, fresh from the shell, can be obtained at this new saloon, at 25 cents per quart.

Fire Department.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

It was expected when your correspondent  entered the list with such a grand flourish for a tilt, that some startling developments were to be made, that would annihilate the Fire Department, root and branch. But the thing has passed over, and no apparent harm has been done. We still live and prosper, while our enemies are fast falling into forgetfulness.

When a writer undertakes to enlighten the public on certain topics, he should endeavor to keep truth on his side, if he would be believed and make proselytes to his opinions. Here this chivalrous correspondent was at fault; he took no heed of this wise maxim.

His assertion, that the Fire Department, as a body, is not prompt in responding to an alarm of fire, was an untruth, which he knew when he penned it. Its character for promptness and energy, under all circumstances, has always been admitted, and never questioned, except by those who delight in misrepresentation to make mischief.

The exception which he takes at the practice of our fire companies, after a fire, of indulging in a trial of skill, for their improvement, is another proof of his ignorance of such matters, and his unwillingness to give advice on the subject. But out of such grave accusations, this public scribbler, comes to the sage conclusion, that it is best to disband the Fire Department—its organization—and return to volunteer service.

Volunteer service! Of what are the ranks of our Fire Department now composed? Are they not filled up with volunteers fresh from among the people? Many of them, men of influence, position and property! whose every interest is identified with the well-being and prosperity of the place. Men of nerve, who have hearts to feel, to dare, and to do; who in sunshine or in storm, leave their business or their firesides, to battle with the element, and to help a brother in distress. And for such sacrifices, they ask nothing—expect nothing—but the good will of their fellow-citizens, and the consciousness of having discharged their duty. Displace them! Who will fill their places?

But the most serious cause of complaint of this writer, is the expense of the Department to the town, without a corresponding benefit. What does he mean? that the Fire Department does not return an equivalent, in the protection of property, for what it draws from the town for its support? Was he at the late fire on Sea street? there he would have seen a refutation of such an inference. Thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of property was at one time in imminent danger, and but for the timely aid of the Fire Department would have been reduced to a heap of ruins. But  saw nothing of this, or has not the frankness to admit it. His ideas of the duties of fire associations, take a curious range. He seems to think they should possess the powers of anticipating fires, in order to prevent their occurrence, as well as the ability of putting them out.

But why pursue this subject further? There are faultfinders in every community—and we have them in ours—and the Fire Department naturally comes in for a share of their abuse.

WEST QUINCY.

MARRYING FEES. The editor of the German Reformed Messenger has been narrating his experience in the way of minister's perquisites. He says: In our experience we have married persons for 37 1/2 cents, we have married on trust—and we have married for a counterfeit bill." To this the New York Independent adds: "We may soften our German friend's grievances by quoting the case of a minister who received as a wedding fee, a salt codfish; which, when he had taken it home for his table, was chiefly eaten by the bride and groom, who called upon him at dinner."

A RELIC OF OLDEN TIMES. Messrs. Ball, Black & Co., Broadway, New York, have at their store, a genuine curiosity. It is the wedding ring of Martin Luther. It is in a capital state of preservation; contains Luther's name in Latin; the date of the marriage, 25th June, 1525; and the ornamental parts show the coil, the ladder, the crucifix, the mitre, and other religious emblems. It has been repaired repeatedly on the inside, and the identity of the ring is complete. Several documents are connected with it to prove that it is genuine. It belongs to one of the Chaplains of General Blieker's division, and will be on exhibition for some time.

THE TREASURY NOTE BILL. Mr. Thomas, our Representative in Congress, in course of a debate in the House, on the Treasury Note Bill, making such issues a legal tender, in all commercial transactions, strongly opposed the measure. His grounds of opposition were: that it was unconstitutional—Congress having no power over the subject—that it would defeat the object of its friends—and that it was a gigantic paper bubble, which must burst, bringing ruin upon the government and country. It is an able speech, and is published at length in the Washington Globe, of February 7.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Mexican government has issued a decree closing Vera Cruz to the commerce of the high seas and the coasting trade.

Accounts from the peach growing districts of New Jersey represent the prospect for a good crop next season as unusually flattering. During the past ten years the Western Railroad (Mass.) has expended in the aggregate $70,000 to keep the track clear of snow and ice. City companies pay large sums for this purpose.

We like the suggestion of an exchange, in speaking of the adoption of a system of taxation by Government, which says: "tax the pleasure carriage, not the ox cart; the distillery, not the bakery; tobacco and brandy, not bread and meat."

Wool is now higher than it has been for forty-four years. This is owing to the large demand for army goods and the advanced prices of cotton.

The President has been authorized by Congress, to take possession of railroad and telegraph lines when in his judgment the public safety requires it.

Colonel Corcoran is to be released from a Southern prison and sent home within the coming two weeks. Such, at least, is the assurance we receive from Washington. Secretary Stanton having taken the matter in hand.

Twenty thousand uniforms furnished by swindling contractors have been condemned by the Inspector General.

The Louisville Journal says that the manufacture of tobacco will be virtually lost to the Confederate States, if their insane rebellion is not speedily crushed. Six new firms are engaged in manufacturing the article already in Pittsburgh, and they draw their supplies from the valley of the Ohio. This will stimulate still more the Louisville market, and lead to the establishment of other factories in northern cities.

The steamer Constitution, with the twenty-three hundred troops which were taken on board in Boston more than a month ago, is still detained at Fortress Monroe for "military reasons." So the people's money goes.—Three thousand a day is of no account.

The late flood in California caused damage to the amount of $50,000 in San Francisco, and it is estimated that $800,000 will hardly cover the losses on the line of the Merced river.

The telegraph announces the death, at Charleston, (S. C.) on Sunday, at the advanced age of 84, of Mr. Willington, of the Charleston Courier. Mr. Willington was one of the oldest journalists in America, having been connected with the Courier for about half a century. He was a native of Massachusetts.

Since the first frost the troops of the Potomac (it is rumored) have grown more and more indifferent to the "girls left behind them." "Getting the mitten" used to be a source of mortification, but now the more they get the better they seem to like it.

There are 22,500 miles of railroad in the United States and 5,000 miles of canal.

The glorious stars and stripes wave now in every State except Alabama, Arkansas and Texas.

A curious cave has recently been discovered in Scotland and explored for the distance of forty or fifty yards; the sides and roof are thickly covered with stalactites, which have a close resemblance to well known objects. One projects from the side in the form of a human skull, another bears an exact resemblance to a horse's jaw-bone, while further on appears a complete set of organ-pipes.—In some places, the sides and roof look as if they had been carved, and in others, resemble an arched passage richly hung with drapery.

Mrs. Catharine Arbin died in Baltimore on the 21st of January, aged 118 years. She had been confined to her bed for three years. Mrs. Arbin was born in Philadelphia in 1744, and lived to see her fifth generation, with great-grandchildren. Her youngest child is now living at the age of about 78 years. Her father, who was of Baltimore, was at the battle of Bunker Hill.

There is another fuel panic in Washington. The condition of the roads is such that fuel carts and wagons cannot come in from the country, and the consequence is that many of the wood dealers are asking ten and twelve dollars a cord for good oak wood.

It is said that all kinds of water fowl are in great abundance in the creeks about Port Royal, and much sport in shooting them is had by the officers of our army and navy.—They add an agreeable variety to many mess tables.

The New York Tribune recommends that no man should be elected to the next Congress who ever made a speech more than fifteen minutes long.

Diphtheria is the troublesome disease among our troops at Hilton Head, S. C.

The Baltimore skirt manufacture has become almost a speculative mania in Berkshire county. They are produced by hand and power looms both, and they superior texture and beautiful colors give them precedence in the market. The supply not being equal to the demand, not less than eighty-six new looms have recently been started on these grounds, mostly at Pittsfield.

The snow is about two and a half feet deep in the interior of Massachusetts. In towns on the Connecticut river travelling is very difficult, except on the principal roads. On the coast east of Portsmouth the snow is covered with a frozen surface of sufficient thickness to bear ox teams.

An English paper states that the ship Vigilant, of Bath, burnt by the Sumter, was ignited at Loyd's, and is the first loss of the institution under the war risk.

OUR FLAG. The National Flag of the United States is an emblem of creation! viz: The days of the week are represented by the seven red stripes; and secular days by the six white stripes; and the heavens are represented by the blue Union, containing stars. Then let us trust in God, and he will do for us more than we can ask or think in sustaining the banner so emblematical of His wisdom and power.

KEROSENE OIL. Mr. Fernald, on Washington street, has a superior article, which he is selling at the lowest market price. With one of his admirable burners—of which he has a great variety—might be turned into day.

PROSPECTUS.

THE BOSTON COURIER--1862.

THE Publishers of the BOSTON COURIER invite the attention of business men, thinking men, and of all who are interested in the various occupations and pursuits of life, to the several editions of their Journal.

For the Union, the Constitution, and the Enforcement of the Laws.

The Boston Daily Courier.

Established in Boston, in 1824.

Is issued every Morning (Sundays excepted) and contains the latest intelligence, by telegraph and otherwise, from all parts of the world, with carefully prepared articles on Government, Politics, Trade, Finance and Agriculture, Marine Intelligence, prompt editorial comments on the questions and affairs of the day, Prices Current, Reports of Public Gatherings, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence, Legal Reports, Reviews of Literature, Art and Music, Agricultural Matters, and discussions of whatever subject is of general interest and importance.

TERMS: EIGHT DOLLARS PER YEAR payable semi-annually in advance. We have reason to believe, that every man of business who has been in the habit of taking the Morning Courier regards it as an invaluable assistant and companion.

THE cash must accompany all orders for the SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER, and the paper will be discontinued at the end of the time paid for.

The Boston Semi-Weekly Courier.

PRICE REDUCED.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER is of the size of the DAILY COURIER, and is issued every Monday and Thursday. It contains the whole of the Ship News prepared for the DAILY COURIER, and nearly all the general reading matter. Hereafter the SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER will be sent to subscribers at the reduced price of THREE DOLLARS PER YEAR, payable in advance.

THE cash must accompany all orders for the SEMI-WEEKLY COURIER, and the paper will be discontinued at the end of the time paid for.

The Boston Weekly Courier.

The Cheapest Weekly in New England

THE WEEKLY COURIER is a complete compendium of the NEWS of the WEEK, and contains the chief editorials, the prices current and market reports, stock quotations, correspondence, and general news matter published in the DAILY COURIER. It also contains an editorial summary of the news of the week, and a great variety of other matter, rendering it in all respects a first class family journal, and particularly adapted to the wants of farmers and mechanics. It has an Agricultural Department, under the supervision of a gentleman of long experience as an agricultural and horticultural writer.

THE WEEKLY COURIER IS MAILED IN SEASONS TO REACH ALL PARTS OF NEW ENGLAND ON OR BEFORE SATURDAY OF EACH WEEK.

TERMS—One dollar and a half per year, in advance. Ten copies of five or more, to one address, one dollar per copy per year. Twenty copies to one address one year for twenty dollars, and one copy gratis to the person getting up the Club. All subscriptions to the Weekly Courier are discontinued at the expiration of the time paid for.

The Boston Courier Prices Current and Review of the Boston Market.

Printed on a letter sheet, for mercantile correspondence, is published every Tuesday morning at two dollars and a half per year, or five cents per single copy.

Specimen copies of the above papers sent gratis to any address, on application.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The circulation of the BOSTON COURIER, which is large, and steadily and rapidly growing, makes it at least as valuable a medium for advertising as any other commercial and business newspaper in New England.

The publishers of the COURIER could easily fill their sheet with the unsought and most liberal commendations of the Press, throughout the country. But they prefer that it should stand altogether upon claims to public confidence, so well-known and established. They believe it has acquired this reputation by the candor, fearlessness, and independence with which it has been conducted, through times of extraordinary confusion of ideas on public subjects, and latterly of almost unexampled public trial. It is now, and will be, as heretofore, the supporter of truly national and conservative principles, opposed alike to radicalism and fanaticism in whatever form, and devoted to the maintenance of good government, law, order, morals, and religion.

THE COURIER earnestly and faithfully upholds the principles of the Constitution as established by WASHINGTON and the fathers of the Republic. These are now either openly or insidiously assailed by undignified foes, and by false pretenses to be supporters of the Union. The Government of the country, with the aid of the people, must take care of the first—the other must be taken care of by the people of the free States, through the inculcation and diffusion of sound opinions upon questions vital to the very existence of the Republic. This is due to ourselves and our children; and especially the latter should be educated, as we and our fathers were, in true Constitutional Union principles. To this great object the COURIER is especially devoted. It has advanced these principles steadily, and under every fortune, and through all obstacles and obloquies, such as the conductor of a newspaper rarely has to endure. Its friends are friends of the Union, now, as ever before—its foes are the open or secret advocates of disunion, with or without the Union—which is to be neither more nor less than opposed to the Constitution and Government of the country.

The publishers of the COURIER conceive, that it thus may render peculiar services and furnish a basis upon which men by whom its principles are valued, and who look by the proper means, to promote and secure the Constitutional restoration of the Union. These can best show their sense of our untiring efforts, under every fortune, and through all obstacles and obloquies, such as the conductor of a newspaper rarely has to endure. Its friends are friends of the Union, now, as ever before—its foes are the open or secret advocates of disunion, with or without the Union—which is to be neither more nor less than opposed to the Constitution and Government of the country.

Address GEO. LUNT & CO., Old State House, State Street, Boston, Mass.

Notice!

OWING to the National Crisis, and the uncertainties of carrying on business with a pecuniary profit at the present time, the subscriber feels it for his interest to withdraw from the Tailoring Business. He would return many thanks to his numerous customers and friends for their many favors.

Poetry.

Meaning of Words.

We know the meaning of most words
By sound as well as sight;
They mean, although they have no men,
So mind and write them right.

For thus in "eccentricity,"
One sees good many c's,
Also in "hubbub-bub-bub,"
The b's are as thick as bees.

There are no i's in English "eyes,"
But e's there are in "case,"
A does not want to make it "eye,"
There's but one p in peas.

Some judges judge the English tongue,
But kill it with a breath,
With wind and words they sentence some Fine sentences to death.

A sea-horse is a sea horse, when
You see him in the sea;
But when you see him in the bay,
A bay horse then is he.

Of course a race course isn't course,
A fine is far from finer;
It is saddening sight to see
A noble pine tree pine.

If miners are all minors, then
Their guardians get their zens;
All glaziers extra pains should take
To put in extra pains.

A kitchen maid is often made
To burn her face, and boil it;
A lady knows no labor, but
To toil it at her toilet!

"How do you do?" said Sal to John,
"So, so," replied he;
"How do you do?" said John to Sal;
"Sometimes sure," said she.

If one had ridden over a lot,
He might his lot be wail;
But 'twould be of no use to him
To rail against a rail.

A hat about a farmer's room
Not long ago I know;
To fly he caught a fly—then Flew up the chimney flue.

But such a scene was never seen,
(I am quite sure of that);
As with sticks all hands essayed
To hit the bat a bat.

A rane is rain, one would suppose,
Because it wants a mind;
And furthermore, 'tis blown about
By every idle wind.

'Tis pun-ishment for me to pun;
'Tis trilling word of wit;
So let it pass unnoticed here,
The dew that's due to earth.

Rich and Poor.

BY RICHARD M. MILNES.

When God built up the dome of blue,
And portioned earth's prolific flow,
The measure of his wisdom drew
A line between the rich and poor;
And till that vault of glory flung,
Or beauteous earth be scarred with flame,
Or aching love be all in all,
That rule of life will last the same.

We know not why, we know not how,
Mankind are framed for weal or woe—
But to the Eternal law we bow,
If such things are they must be so.
Yet, let no cloudy dreams destroy
One truth outshining bright and clear,
That wealth abides in hope and joy,
And poverty in faith and fear.

Behold our children as they play!
Bliss creatures, fresh from nature's hand;
The peasant boy as great and gay
As the young heir to gold and land;
Their various toys of equal worth,
Their little needs of equal care,
And halls of marble, built of earth,
All home alike endued and fair.

They knew no better! Would that we Could keep our knowledge safe from woe;
So power should find and leave us free,
So pride be but the owner's curse;
Our hearts would tell, by instinct sure,
What papers are the ambitious rich!
How wealthy the contented poor.

Grant us, O God, but health and heart,
And strength to keep desire at bay,
And ours must be the better part,
Whatever else befalls our way.
Each day may bring sufficient ill;
But we can meet and fight it through,
If hope sustains the hand of will,
And conscience is our captain too.

Anecdotes.

A father of three sons and five daughters was asked what family he had. The answer was:

I have three sons, and they have each five sisters.
Mercy! replied the interrogator, are a family
ye mean have!

Sir Walter Scott once gave an Irishman a shilling, when a squire would have been sufficient.

Remember, Pat, said Sir Walter, you owe me a sixpence.
May your honor live till I pay you! was
the reply.

A railroad contractor observed one morning, that the face of one of his gang had its surface all spotted with bruises and plasters.
Ah! Jimmy, said he, what have you been doing?

Not very much, Sur, answered Jimmy; I was just down at Billy Mulligan's last night, Sur, an' him an' me we had a bit of a discussion and sticks!

A wrangler tried to put down his opponent
with the question—
If Noah did send out a dove that never returned, where did it go to?

Why, retorted his antagonist, I suppose somebody shot it.

A negro, speaking of her children, said
of one who was lighter colored than the rest:
I nigger could bar' det ar' brat, kase he show dirt so easy.

Winchester's
HYPOPHOSPHITES.
FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Dyspepsia, Scrofula, Marasmus, Loss of Appetite, Neuralgia, Female Complaints, and all Disorders of the Nervous
and Blood Systems.

This Remedy has obtained a great reputation for curing EXTRAORDINARY CASES IN ALL STAGES OF CONSUMPTION. It is recommended by many thousand Physicians in the United States and Europe—having been used with RESULTS UNPARALLELED IN THE ANNALS OF MEDICINE.
The Hypophosphites have a two-fold and specific action on the one hand, increasing the principle which CONSTITUTES NERVOUS ENERGY, and on the other, being the most POWERFUL BLOOD GENERATING AGENTS KNOWN.
In cases of Nervous Debility, or Prostration of the Vital Powers, from any cause, this Remedy has no superior.

"Winchester's Genuine Preparation"
Is the only reliable form of the Hypophosphites, made after the Original Formula of Dr.
Chenouillet.

THE SPECIFIC PILL.
A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness,
and Genital Irritability in either sex.
This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogues of human ills. It saps the very springs of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into tubercle and a premature grave. From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the Most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excesses.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Sperm-atorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]
I have found them all that could be desired—
Their effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used
them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years.
I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E.
P. Drake, M. D.
This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor
is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredients combined with it.

PRICE—$1 per Box. Six Boxes for $5,
by mail, prepaid. For sale by all respectable Druggists, and at the Sole General Depot in the United States, by J. WINCHESTER,

DR. LA CROIX'S
PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATIESON THE Physiological View of Marriage.

250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRA-
VINGS. Price only TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union. On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, husings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling
interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College
Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c. &c.
It is a truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, and contains secret doubts of their physical condition, and
who are conscious of having hazarded the
health, happiness and privileges to which
every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a hard habit
in youth, the effects of which are dizziness,
pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in
the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and
lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, and all the various ailments which
the author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON
TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our
time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the
knowledge and researches of the most skilled Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of
the many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS TREATMENTS, which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may
rest assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SE-CRET and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished us
heretofore, as a Physician in our PECU-LIAR department of professional practice.

For the past twenty-five years
FRENCH FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish
for Medicines, the efficacy of which has been tested in thousands of cases, and never failed
to effect speedy cures without any bad results
will use none but Dr. DeLaney's Female Periodical Pills. The only precaution necessary
to be observed, is, ladies should not take them
if they have reason to believe they are in
certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying
each box), though always safe and healthy,
so long, yet so active are they.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.
TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

For married ladies whose health will not admit, or who have no desire to increase their families, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and
has been extensively used during the last 20
years. Price reduced to $10.

THE SECRETS OF YOUTH UNVEILED
A Treatise on the Cause of Premature Decay, a salutary warning. Just published, a book showing the insidious progress and prevalence among schools, (both male and female),
of this fatal habit, pointing out the fatality
that invariably attends its victims, and developing the whole progress of the disease, from
the beginning to the end.

It will be sent by Mail on receipt of two [3]
cent stamps.
Attendance daily, from 8 in the morning till 12 at night, and on Sundays from 2 till 5 P. M.

HEBARD'S
PATENT OIL!
No more accidents by Burning Fluid!
A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.
THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds
of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Sperm or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not
choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such
as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps
free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm
and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market
of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free
from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor,
and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it
is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.
State, County and Town Rights for sale,
with full directions to make, by addressing
the Patentee.

Caveat applied for and granted Feb. 24th,
1860. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861.
The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon.
Wholesale 80 cents per gallon.
Orders solicited and filled with despatch.
Letters promptly answered.

PURE LIQUORS AND
FOR PRIVATE USE AND
MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers,
a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say
that our experience of more than FORTY years
as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for
the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us
to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly
pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines
for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and to send them correctly to their destination, and to render their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling
or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive
our best personal attention, and that every article
sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue
of goods, prices, &c.

eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eyelid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache; with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath
very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knowing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; flatulency in the stomach;
occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convul-

The Man I Like.

I like the man in any sphere,
Be his possessions what they may,
Who owns the password—"persevere,"
And struggles manfully away;
Nurs'd on the downy lap of ease,
Or tossed upon the sea of fate;
I like the man whom trifles please,
Whose mighty love still conquers hate.

I like the man who never broke
A promise to the heart or ear;
I like the man who never spoke
A word unkind or insincere;
I like the man whose cautious skill
In channels of good works doth run;
I like the man whose iron will Yields not till such good works are done.

I like the man who never paused
A low or slanderous tale to hear;
I like the man who never feared
A virgin's blush, a maiden's tear;
I like the man who ne'er belonged
To any vain or foolish creed;
I like the man who never wronged
A brother e'en in thought or deed.

I like the man whose thoughts are pure,
Who wears within a double breast,
A noble heart trained to endure,
And e'en in sorrow how the best;
Who promptly, heartily forgives,
E'en as he hopes to be forgiven,
An earnest holy life who lives,
At peace with man, at peace with Heaven.

Scraps.

Clothe not thy language either with obscenity or affection; in the one thou discoverest too much darkness, in the other too much lightness. He that speaks from the understanding to the understanding is the best interpreter.

Do good with what thou hast, or it will do thee no good.

The love that has nothing but beguery to sustain it, soon withers away.

Religion should begin in the family. The holiest sanctuary is home. The family altar is more venerable than that of the Cathedral. The education of the soul should begin and be carried on at the fireside.

Never be idle. Always have something to do. Remember moments are the golden seeds of time.

A room usually vacant—the room for improvement.

An Irish water once complimented a salmon in the following manner: "Faith, it's not two hours since that fish was walking round this estate with his hands in his pockets, never dreaming what a pretty invitation he'd have to join you gentlemen at dinner."

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

Write your own epitaph in youth; make it as flattering as you choose; and then devote the rest of your life to efforts to deserve it.

It is little troubles that wear the heart out. It is easier to throw a bomb shell a mile than a feather—even with artillery.

Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of the people you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten.

Your candid friend has never anything pleasing to say to you. He reminds you of his pet virtue by wounding you with it.

Vice stings us even in our pleasures; but virtue consoles us even in our pains.

Married life often begins with rosewood and ends with pine. Think of that my dears, before you furnish your parlors.

Too much noise. An Irishman from Battle Creek, Michigan, was at the battle of Bull Run, and was somewhat startled when the head of his companion on his left hand was knocked off by a cannon ball. A few moments after, however, a spent ball broke the fingers of his comrade on the other side. The latter threw down his gun and yelled with pain, when the Irishman rushed to him, exclaiming: "Blasht your soul, you owd woman, stop crying; you make more noise about it than the man who losht his head!"

A volunteer who prides himself upon the domestic arts he has learned during camp life, writes home to advise the girls not to be in a hurry to marry, for the boys will return in a short time, and the girls can then get good husbands, who can cook, wash and iron, and do general housework, or work in the garden, or run errands for their wives.

Miscellaneous.

Paul Pliant.

THE MAN WHO COULDN'T SAY NO.

Two negatives, they say, make an affirmative. Therefore, I think it safe to suppose that Paul Pliant's father and mother must have been as negative a pair as ever came together, for Paul was the most affirmative man that has yet been heard of. He always said "Yes" to every thing that was said, proposed, suggested, insinuated, or hinted to him. He was a true "administrative man" under all governments, never being in the opposition. He was one of those over-polite, over-good-natured, oh-be-easy, acquiescent mortals, who seem to be sent into the world for no other purpose than to show how much a man may suffer for a little contra-mindedness. Yes! Certainly. By all means. No doubt of it. With all my heart. Very happy to oblige you. Entirely at your service. Oh yes. Oh yes. Such were Paul's constant replies. As to saying "No," it was as impossible to get it out, as Macbeth's "Amen." When he had most need of denying it, it stuck in his throat. I don't know that he ever sat in the Legislature, but I am sure that if he ever did, when the yeas had it, they had Paul also. He would not have cried, Nie pastem in the Polish diet, if the words could have demolished the partition treaty. Though he was not in the opposition, yet I think it hardly correct to call him a Jackson man, for he never voted any thing in his life, unless, in the style of the honest country representative, Mr. Speaker, I shall give my veto in favor of this bill. In short, Paul was the very epitome of assent—a man of amen.

Now this is a very good character for a man to bear, on some accounts, for it gets one the reputation of a good-natured fellow, and as the world commonly pretends to have a high opinion of a good-natured fellow, and according to the proverb, "opinion is the queen of the world," the reader may think Paul must have had a happy time of it. No such thing. Paul's good nature brought him into more embarrassment and vexations than if he had been the crossiest cur that ever snarled. I speak not of lending umbrellas—'tis the lot of mortality. To lend money is about the same, though money lent sometimes comes back. But who would believe that a good natured man, merely by reason of his good nature, and for no other fault under the sun, could be led through such a rignarole dance of adventure by the perversity of fortune, that he fought a duel and almost married a widow!

The Widow Wilful was a lady of a certain age; she had made the best of time, and time returned the compliment. She had shed many tears for the loss of her good man—so she protested, and I cannot help thinking she spoke the truth, for she tried very hard to get another. However, this did not prove so easy a matter; for although the widow was not without charms—the men were shy—What could be the reason? She gave splendid parties, and had sparks and dangles without number, but it was never a match. What could be the reason? The reader will ask again.

It is not exactly my business to tell as the story will be plain enough without it, and if the reader cannot guess, it would not much help him to let out the whole mystery.

This is truly delightful, said Paul, one evening, to the widow, as he leaned his arm over the back of her chair, worked his face up to the blandest of all his acquiescent smiles, and essayed some flattering compliment concerning the widow's fine entertainment. This was truly delightful; so much hilarity and cheerfulness—so many happy faces. I love to look on them.

Paul inadvertently raised his eyes as he uttered these words, and at the close of the speech was looking straight into the widow's face. He meant not the least harm in the world; but the widow pretended to blush. She pursed up her pretty mouth.

Oh, Mr. Pliant, you are a great flatterer, but we know you are honest. You never say one thing and mean another.

Certainly, by all means, my dear madam. But really, Mr. Pliant, my dear sir, when a gentleman tells a lady that he loves to look on her, you know that really is significant.

Oh yes, certainly; you are quite right, madam.

Well, you are frank, Mr. Pliant, and I shall certainly give you credit for sincerity. Another man might say ten times as much, and I should never think of regarding it; but I know I can rely upon the word of so honorable a gentleman as Mr. Paul Pliant.

Rely upon my word! surely you may, Mrs. Wilful. I should be sorry if —

Certainly, madam, my hand is entirely at your service. Paul was in such a flutter that he was not aware that he was uttering, till the words were past recall. Bless me! what have I said! thought he to himself. But it was too late.

Oh, Mr. Pliant! said she, blushing up to the ears, you are too generous. I mean you are almost too precipitate. Now, were it any other man, I should suspect him of trifling. But such a man as Mr. Pliant.

Confound the jade! quoth Paul to himself, how shall I get out of the scrape? I hope she isn't going to faint. Mrs. Wilful—madam—you know I say a thousand things of this sort I can't help it you know.

That's just as I always supposed, Mr. Pliant; a man of your sincerity and frankness, can't help uttering his true sentiments. An! I like the honest man above all things! Oh, Mr. Pliant, you are an honest man.

Now this is too bad, thought Paul, in great tribulation. What shall I say? My dear madam, I certainly wish to be honest. Compliments, you know are compliments; but when a man means nothing—you know.

Certainly, Mr. Pliant, you are quite right. When a man means nothing, he should say nothing. I know those were your sentiments. Wasn't I right?

Oh yes, by all means; quite right, returned Paul in deeper embarrassment than ever. He found himself fairly caught; the widow's eyes sparkled, and she languished three times at him. I won't speak another word, said he to himself—it only makes the matter worse. He snatched a cup of whipped cream and pretended to eat it.

The widow saw his embarrassment, and whether she suspected his determination to resist all further attempts to entangle him or not, we do not exactly know; but she resolved not to let him escape. A silence of some moments followed, till Paul, finding he could not decently hold his tongue any longer, cast about for something innocent to say. After some hesitation upon a variety of topics, he judged safe to admire the carpet—from the carpet, a natural transition was made to the pictures, and from the pictures to the window curtains—the window curtains led to the arm chair, the arm-chair to the sofa, and the sofa to a pair of little babies in alabaster in the chimney-piece.

Charming! Delightful! exclaimed Paul—not exactly knowing whether he meant to be understood of the arm-chair, or some other article of furniture.

Ain't they? said the widow.

What have I said again? quoth Paul to himself beginning to tremble with apprehension. The furniture is in very good taste. Mrs. Wilful—very elegant—very fine.

All vanity, Mr. Pliant, said the widow, affecting a very solemn look—these things are all vanity.

Oh yes—you are quite right—all vanity, replied Paul, taking a spoonful of whipped cream, and finding he had got nothing in his mouth.

Ah, Mr. Pliant! said the widow, languishingly.

Yes, exactly so, returned Paul.

Exactly how, Mr. Pliant? pardon me. I didn't perceive the drift of your observation. Beg pardon, madam—I was only saying—as you remarked, that every thing was remarkably fine in this house of yours, and that all is vanity or rather I should say, that one thing is needful.

A husband! I understand you—you mean the furniture is complete except one article.

My dear Mr. Pliant, I never thought you a deceiver. Oh! there are some men who are so deceiving.

Paul was at his last gasp as the widow uttered this pathetic exclamation: I must set the matter right this moment, thought he, or it will be all over with me. He threw himself into an attitude of earnest entreaty. Listen to me one moment, madam, said he with as much firmness of voice as he was master of—but luckless man. His foot catching in the hearth-rug, tossed him upon his knees in an instant, and the attention of the whole company being roused by the fall, every body looked around and beheld Paul in supplication at the widow's feet. He remained transfixed with horror and vexation for two-thirds of a minute, and then, without uttering a word, made a leap for the door, and bolted out of the house.

The next day Paul's adventure was the talk of the town, and the congratulations and condolence which he received from his friends on his engagement to the Widow Wilful, almost drove him stark mad. Paul, my dear fellow, I give you joy; but who would have thought you had the courage to do it? Paul, how could you do such a thing? Paul, I wish you much happiness—but widows are such cunning things. Paul, it's all over with you then? etc., etc., etc. Such were the salutations to which he was subjected for a week; ay, for nine days; for so long must a wounder be allowed to last, especially when it gives people a privilege to remind a man of his misfortunes. As to denying the thing, that of course was out of the question with Paul; besides had not a whole house full of people seen him on his knees before the widow, and did not the whole town affirm that it was certainly a match? Paul gave up in despair all thoughts of gainsaying or denial, and only hoped that some lucky accident would put in between him and the dreadful catastrophe.

Well, Paul, my conquering hero, when is to be the happy day? asked his friend Tom Sly, with a look compounded of roguish sarcasm and good natured sarcasm.

Oh yes, a very happy day it will be certainly, returned Paul, shrugging up his shoulders.

Pretty soon, I suppose?

Oh yes; soon enough, no doubt of that, eh?

Left it all pretty much to her, eh? Well, that's quite right; women love to have their way, hey Paul?

Exactly so, as you say, replied Paul, with a suppressed groan.

The widow is certainly a fine woman, said Tom, with an almost malicious look of condolence.

Paul made a very low bow, and a very desperate attempt to look smiling at the compliment.

Had a husband three years ago; died one day, poor man.

What ailed him? said Paul, wishing to turn the conversation; but feeling at the same time an awkward sort of interest in the topic.

They say she pinched him to death.

Horrid! exclaimed Paul with an involuntary shudder.

Though I don't altogether believe it, returned Tom, in a tone as if he only said it to comfort his friend Paul. It was a great deal worse than if he had said nothing at all; but probably this was just the thing he meant.

Thank ye, said Paul, with an air of dolorous resignation.

Here they were interrupted by the entrance of Colonel Strut. More friendly congratulations, I suppose, thought Paul to himself, in heroic resignation.

I believe I have the honor to address Mr. Paul Pliant, said the Colonel, marching with stately port, and in double common time up to Paul, and planting himself bolt upright before his face.

At your service, entirely, said Paul, with meek and measured civility.

And Mr. Pliant, I presume, continued the Colonel, making half a bow, and screwing up his martial features into an apology for a civil smile—is to marry the Widow Wilful?

Oh yes, certainly—that is—so they say.

Then, sir, I have only to say, said the Colonel, lifting himself up as high as possible, and twisting his forefinger into one of his formidable black whiskers, that considering myself supplanted, beguiled and circumvented by you, I apprehend you are ready to give me such satisfaction as the laws of honor require?

Certainly, sir, with great pleasure, replied Paul. Then, sir, I shall desire the pleasure of your company on the other side of the State line, returned the Colonel, in the civillest tone possible. Pistols, I suppose would be your preference.

Pistols! said Paul, in a tone which he meant for an ejaculation of surprise.

Very well, said the Colonel, without having time for any further explanation. Here are the terms of the meeting, which I trust you will find perfectly agreeable. So saying, he handed a paper to Paul, who received it, and ran it over with his eyes, without having self-possession enough to gather the meaning of a particle of its contents.

Perfectly agreeable, certainly, said Paul, in his usual assenting way. The Colonel turned upon his heel, and stalked off.

Paul's good friend Tom, snatched up the document and read—pistols—ten A. M.—thirty paces, seconds to mark out the ground—no interference till third shot—surgeons for two—mortally wounded, etc., etc.

Why, Paul, do you know you are to fight a duel?

An I? said Paul; then heaven be praised, there is still a hope left; for if I am shot to death, I shall escape marrying the widow!

When Paul arrived at the field of action, on the eventful day, he found his spirits a great deal firmer than he had expected. In fact, he felt inspired by the greatness of the occasion, and very naturally; for when a man knows he must be either shot or married, he must be aware that the crisis requires all his fortitude. Paul took his station, with the most bloodless intention that ever prompted a man of battle. I had much rather be killed than kill, thought he.

One—two—three, said the second, as Paul raised his pistol to about forty-seven degrees of elevation. Fire! bang! The Colonel's bullet whistled by Paul's left ear, and Paul's hit the steeple of a martin box on the top of an adjoining barn.

Twice more the pistols were tried, when the seconds interposed: the Colonel declared he was satisfied, and they shook hands, thereby showing that Paul Pliant by shooting three times in the face of the blessed sun, had proved that he never supplanted, beguiled and circumvented the aforesaid Colonel Strut; for so it is laid down in the code of honor.

It seemed now to be all over with Paul. I must be married then, said he to himself—killing won't save me. The day was fixed, and his fate appeared inevitable. The nearer it approached, the less he felt resigned to it. The day before the wedding, Paul met Dr. Bindentight, the worthy parson who was to join him to his bonny bride.

Doctor, said Paul, how shall I escape?

There are more things "to let" than are placarded. Hearts are to let every day; old hearts, young hearts, stricken hearts—all empty—all to let.

There are heads to let; to any new thing, to rags, ologies and lists; heads without a tenant.

There are hands to let; hands plump and fair; hands lean and brown. Those to love, those to labor; these for rags and those for rings.

There are consciences to let; elastic accommodating conscience; at five per cent a month; sixty per cent, a year. To let on bond and mortgage and pound of flesh.

And so it goes, from sods to souls; almost everything with its price; everything in the market but griefs. They are never quoted, never at premium, never to let.

Cur Three Months Troops.

Gen Schooner in his report pays the following deserved tribute to our brave soldiers who so nobly and promptly responded to their country's call, in April last:

"It would far exceed the limits of this Report, to recount in detail the brave acts of our three months troops during their term of service. I have given only a bare outline. It is sufficient, perhaps, to say that they were the first to respond to the call of the President, the first to march through Baltimore, to the defense of the Capital, the first to shed their blood for the maintenance of our government, the first to open the new route to Washington, by way of Annapolis, the first to land on the soil of Virginia, and hold possession of the most important fortress in the Union, the first to make the voyage of the Potomac and approach the Federal city by water, as they had been the first to reach it by land. They upheld the good name of the State during their entire term of service, as well by their good conduct and gentlemanly bearing as by their courage and devotion to duty in the hour of peril. They proved the sterling worth of our volunteer militia. Their record is one which will ever redound to the honor of Massachusetts, and will be prized among her historic treasures. These men have added new splendor to our Revolutionary annals, and the brave sons who were shot down in the streets of Baltimore on the 19th of April, have rendered doubly sacred the day when the green-sward of Lexington Common was drenched with the blood of their fathers."

The Two Ways.

Two clergymen were settled in their youth in contiguous parishes. The congregation of the one had become very much broken and scattered, while that of the other remained large and strong. At a ministerial gathering, Dr. A. said to Dr. B.:

"Brother, how has it happened that, while I have labored as diligently as you have, and preached better sermons, and more of them, my parish has been scattered to the winds, and yours remains strong and unbroken?"

Dr. B. facetiously replied: "O, I'll tell you, brother. When you go fishing, you must get a rough pole for a handle, to which you attach a large codline and a great hook, and twice as much bait as the fish can swallow. With these accoutrements, you dash up to the brook, and throw your hook, with there, blee, you dogs. Thus you scare away all the fish. When I go fishing, I get a little switching pole, a small line, and just such a hook and bait as a fish can swallow. Then I creep up to the brook, and gently slip them in, and I twitche 'em out, twitche 'em out, till my basket is full."

The Great Man.

The hero in Christ's army is not the man who has rank, title, and dignity, and chariot, and horsemen. It is the man who looks not on his own things, but the things of others.

It is the man who is kind to all, tender to all, thoughtful for all, with a hand to help all, and a heart to feel for all. It is the man that spends and is spent, to make the vice and misery of the world less, to bind up the broken hearted, to befriend the friendless, to cheer the sorrowful, to enlighten the ignorant, and to raise the poor. This is the truly great man in the sight of God.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 22d, 1862.

BORN TO MASTER, OF NOBILITY WE.

UNFORTUNATE. We are sorry to learn that our highly respected citizen, Seth Adams, Esq., had his pocket picked of a wallet containing upward of two hundred dollars, while attending the funeral of Dr. Bell on Monday last, at Charleston, during the time the coffin was upon the bier in front of St. John's Church. We hope Mr. Adams may be fortunate enough to recover the money, as it must fall quite heavily upon his shoulders being somewhat aged and infirm.

The wife of Dr. Cutler also had her pocket picked of a wallet containing a small sum of money at the same place.

PROBATE COURT. We would remind those who may have any Probate Business to attend to that the Court is held in the Selectmen's Room, in this town, on Tuesday next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon.

MORE ENCOURAGING. The war news is still more gratifying. The Union forces since our last issue, have taken Fort Donelson a very important position on the Cumberland river, and 15,000 prisoners. The battle was very severe and the loss heavy on both sides. There are rumors that the Governor of Tennessee has ordered the troops of that State to lay down their arms. Fort Columbus on the Mississippi river is being evacuated by the rebels. Gen Price, the rebel General who has made considerable stir in Missouri and Arkansas, is nearly surrounded and will soon be taken as his army seems demoralized.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. The total receipts of this road the past year were $32,237.54; expenses $20,659.43. The earnings of the road have fallen off greatly during the hard times, and the stockholders must whistle for a dividend, as of the net earnings over $10,000 went to interest on coupons, sinking fund, &c. The fares on this road are lower than any other road in the State.

RIOUS. Parker Pillsbury's lecture at North Bridgewater, recently, was so interrupted by rowdies as to bring it to an abrupt termination. The Gazette says that six of the offenders were brought before Justice Bryant and fined from $1 to $5 and costs.

A REMARKABLE TOWN. Duxbury in this State is a wonderful place for longevity. They don't die, but dry up and are blown away. The old folks are only kept from passing on by being pinned to their chairs. A friend recently visited a lady in Duxbury who is one hundred years old. Her daughter is fresh eight. A few months ago a child was born having eight grandmothers, that is; grandmothers, great-grandmothers, and great-great-grandmothers, seven of whom were living.

A NEW IDEA. Mr. John Clark has published a new plan for an Atlantic telegraph. He proposes to float the cable at the depth of sixty feet or so by big buoys to support nine-tenths of the weight close to the cable, the remaining tenth to be supported by a number of very small buoys at the surface, which would not be injured if struck by a passing vessel, and admit of reaching the cable for repairs if injured.

SPEECH OF MINISTER FAULKNER. One of the most significant indications that the spirit of rebellion is broken, and that Southern men would be glad to return to their allegiance, is found in the speech made by Hon. Charles J. Faulkner, Minister to France during the Buchanan administration, at a dinner given to him at Martinsburg, Virginia, last Saturday night. The telegraphic report says:—

"Mr. Faulkner said in effect that the policy of secession, as it had been carried out, was a failure. It had been accompanied with an unnecessary waste of life, the best blood of the South, and an immense sacrifice of property."

"If this course was continued in it would pile ruin on ruin. The public sentiment of Western Virginia was opposed to it. He also intimated that he had no affiliation with those who wished the present war to continue. His remarks were acquiesced in by the large audience present; there is no doubt but they reflected the true sentiments of nine-tenths of the people of the upper counties of the Potomac."

DEATH AT THE WHITE HOUSE. In Washington, on Thursday evening last, William Lincoln, son of the President, aged ten years. His disease was Pneumonia. The other child who has also been sick is recovering.

Supreme Judicial Court at Dedham.

Sentence of George C. Hersey for the murder of Betsey Frances Tirrell.

The spring term of the Supreme Judicial Court opened at Dedham, Tuesday, at nine o'clock, Chief Justice Bigelow and Judge Merrick on the bench.

The first business before the Court was to pass sentence of death on George C. Hersey, who was convicted in May last of the murder of Betsey Frances Tirrell, at Weymouth, by administering strychnine. Since the conviction of Hersey, his counsel, Messrs. George G. Sullivan and E. C. Baker, have argued a motion for a new trial before the full bench, but the motion was denied, and in due course of law the present term was fixed upon as the time for passing sentence of death.

Hersey came into Court attended by his counsel, and took his seat in the prisoner's dock. Since his last appearance in the Court room his heavy beard has been taken off, and his face was now completely shaven. He does not seem to have suffered from his lengthened confinement, but was calm and composed and apparently in good health and spirits.

The Court was opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Babcock, Rector of the Episcopal church in Dedham.

When Attorney General Foster moved that sentence of death be passed upon Hersey.

The Court now called upon Hersey to know if he had any thing to say before sentence was passed upon him. He calmly replied: "I have nothing to say, sir."

Hersey still standing, Chief Justice Bigelow pronounced the sentence of death, as follows:

George C. Hersey: It now becomes the painful duty of the Court to award against you the judgment which the law affixes to the crime of which you stand convicted. Under the humane provisions of our law, there is but one offence, the commission of which subjects the guilty party to the forfeiture of life. In the brief and simple, but expressive and solemn language of the statute, it is exacted that "whoever is guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer the punishment of death." Of this high and heinous offence—the taking of human life, "with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought," you have been found guilty by a jury, carefully selected by yourself, and after a patient and impartial trial, in which the counsel assigned by the Court to conduct your defence, have with great zeal and earnestness exerted their professional skill and ability in your behalf.

To the verdict and to the sufficiency of the indictment, we have been able to find no valid objection by reason of any error in law, nor, upon a deliberate and careful review of the evidence adduced at the time, can we see any aspect of the case by which a firm, conscientious and honest jury could have arrived at a different result. In the justice of your conviction, the Court are constrained to express their free and entire concurrence. The verdict was the necessary and inevitable conclusion resulting from the evidence of your guilt as disclosed in the trial.

There are no circumstances to mitigate the atrocity of your crime. It stands without palliation. A man of mature years, after an experience in life which ought to have had the effect of moderating your passions and chastening your spirit, you permitted yourself to entertain an illicit passion for a young and inexperienced female, upon whom you practised the vile arts of the seducer. Having accomplished the gratification of your lust, you sought to remove all evidence of your guilt, and at the same time avoid making that reparation to the injured woman, which you had promised, and which could alone atone for the great wrong you had done her.

In the execution of this purpose, you resolved to take her life. With a resolute and premeditated atrocity you resorted to means which left your victim no power of self defence, and which ensured the speedy and certain accomplishment of your wicked designs. Under such circumstances you cannot expect or ask for sympathy or clemency. The stern demands of the law can alone be regarded.

What a lesson is taught by your example! How clearly does the history of your offence show that lust and evil passion, when once indulged, lead their victim by straight and certain paths to swift destruction, and that artifice and cunning and deceit are of no avail to screen the guilty or to enable them to elude the keen eye of justice. To others, the lesson thus taught may be profitable. To you the contemplation of the enormity of your guilt, although it cannot save you from the penalty of your crime, may nevertheless serve as a means to arouse your conscience, and enable you to seek for repentance and forgiveness in that Divine source which is now your only refuge. We earnestly exhort you to lose no time in humbling yourself before God, and by sincere contrition and heartfelt prayer for pardon, to prepare yourself to meet the great and final change which awaits you in the execution of the solemn sentence which, as ministers of the law, it is now our duty to pronounce upon you.

That sentence is, that you be taken from this place to the common jail of the County of Norfolk, there to remain until, on such a day as shall be fixed by the executive government of the Commonwealth, you be removed to the place of execution, there to be hung by the neck until you are dead. And may God have mercy on your soul.

While the sentence was pronounced, the Judge and all in the court room rose to their feet. The prisoner listened with the utmost composure, and seated himself, without showing the least emotion. He was at once removed from the dock and taken back to jail. During his confinement Hersey has been very quiet and gentlemanly in his deportment, and still asserts his innocence of the crime charged upon him.

FAKE CROWDER. There will be a free Chowder served up at the Hancock Billiard and Oyster Saloon this evening.

From our Army on the Potomac.

CAMP JACKSON, WILLIAMSPORT, MD., FEBRUARY 10TH, 1862.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

Four months ago we pitched tents in this camp, little thinking at the time that the month of February would find us in the same spot; but the preparations for the "forward movement" not being complete, we must patiently await the orders of Gen. McClellan. The time has been spent as profitably by the 13th, as by any regiment in the division. Instead of laying idle in winter quarters, we have, besides guarding the camps, done provost duty at Williamsport and Hagerstown, and picket duty at Hancock, Orleans, Sir John's Run and Falling Waters; so that, although the head quarters of the Regiment has been here, different companies have been posted along the Potomac for nearly fifty miles.

Two months ago, this Company was detailed to guard the little town of Hancock, thirty miles up the Potomac, where we spent five weeks, very pleasantly, having a nice brick house for quarters, and every thing in a more civilized style, than can be possible in camp. While there, we visited the "Sacred soil" several times on foraging and scouting expeditions.

A short time before we left Hancock, the bridges burnt by the rebels, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, were repaired as far as the Alpine station, which is just across the river from it. The station was guarded by this Company, until relieved by the Illinois 33th, who were attacked, and compelled to retreat across the river, by a large force commanded by Gen. Jackson. The rebels, after burning the depot, shelled Hancock, and retired, carrying with them the camp equipment, and stores of the 39th.

They next appeared near Romney, and Gen. Lander, who was stationed there, was ordered to fall back to Cumberland, which he did.

Soon after the Secesh occupied Romney, Gen. Lander attacked them and drove them as far as the river, which they crossed, and then burnt the bridge to prevent pursuit. Jackson's troops were scattered in all directions, and the Southern press censured him severely for attempting to occupy the place. It represents his troops as scattered among the mountains in Western Virginia, and in a deplorable condition—many having died from hunger and exposure.

On the day of the battle, we were ordered to pack every thing, and be in light marching order, prepared to march at any moment; but the burning of the bridges prevented Gen. Lander from driving them in this direction; so after remaining on the alert a whole day, with blankets rolled and rations in our haversacks, we were disappointed; but we hope for better luck next time.

President's Proclamation.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 19.

It is recommended to the people of the United States that they assemble in their customary places of meeting for public solemnities on the 22d day of February instant, and celebrate the Anniversary of the Birth of the Father of his Country, by causing to be read to them his immortal Farewell Address.

Given under my hand and seal of the United States.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. Adams. Of our Minister to England, Mr. Thurlow Weed writes as follows:—

"He is the right man for the right place. Besides his knowledge of the duties, and his ability to discharge them, both Mr. Adams and his family possess in an eminent degree the personal and social qualities which commend them to the high and refined circles and associations which surround them, and in which they are moving. Nor did the change in this regard occur any too early, for I learn from unquestionable authority that the interests of the government here, as in France, were but indifferently represented."

Representative Colfax has presented to the House five petitions from publishers of New York and Philadelphia, recommending amendments to the bill simplifying the postage on printed matter, authorizing news dealers to send show-bills relating to newspapers, &c., a newspaper postage, containing their right to receive packages of papers and pay postage thereon separately, and allowing matter not now mailable, dangerous packages excepted, to be sent by mail at book rates. They do not recommend any change in the proposition to consolidate the present rates of three and a quarter cents and six and a half cents into a uniform rate of five cents per quarter on weeklies. The effect of this consolidation would not be to increase the newspaper postage in the aggregate, but to realize about the same revenue, and enable subscribers to pay.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. We have received through our Representative in Congress, Mr. Thomas, the House Document of Major Mordecai, on military matters, or the science of modern warfare. It is a rare and expensive work; got up in the best style of the art—and richly illustrated. Mr. Thomas will please accept our thanks.

For the Patriot.

Quincy Horse Railroad Company.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

The Act to incorporate the Quincy Railroad Company is as follows:

SECTION 1. The Quincy Railroad Company is hereby authorized to increase its capital to the amount of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. In case of disagreement between said Quincy Railroad Company and the Trustees of the Neponset Bridge as to the mode and terms of crossing said Bridge by said Company's road, the same shall be fixed and determined by three Commissioners, to be appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court on the application of either party, and to be paid by the parties as said Commissioners shall determine.

SEC. 3. The time for locating and constructing that portion of said Company's road which lies between the town of Quincy and the point of connection with the Horse Railroad running through Dorchester Avenue, is hereby extended to one year.

SEC. 4. All the tracts of said Railroad in said town of Dorchester, shall be constructed upon such reasonable terms, as to filling and excavating upon the streets over which said road may pass, and at such grades as the Selectmen of said town shall determine to be for the public safety and convenience; and said Selectmen shall have full power to make such regulations as to the rate of speed on said tracks as they shall deem necessary. Said Company shall keep in repair and maintain such portion of said streets as shall be used for its tracks.

SEC. 5. This Act shall take effect upon its passage.

An article in your last issue, says, "the Bill so harmonized conflicting interests, that it passed to be enacted without opposition." True to the letter in the Legislature. But how did the matter stand before the Committee, who submitted the Bill? Let the writer answer that question fairly. It is certainly gratifying to the true friends of the Quincy Railroad Company, to learn that the powers given to the Supreme Judicial Court, as set forth in the second section of the additional Act are in harmony with the views of the honorable Commissioners of Norfolk County.

Here is the story in a few plain words; de-spairing of any amicable arrangement with the County Commissioners, the new Corporation asked the Legislature for an additional Act; and entrusted their affairs to the custody of judicious and energetic gentlemen, who, in the many hearings before the Committee on Railroads and Canals at the State House, were met at every point with opposition and learned counsel and others. The Committee patiently listened to the matter, pro and con, and very sensibly arrived at the conclusion to grant the request of the petitioners. The new Bill was not one of compromise, but of justice and right to the enterprising projectors of this new avenue from Quincy to Boston.

USE OF A NEWSPAPER. A respectable farmer and church-goer of East Haven, at the commencement of the year, caused his newspaper to be discontinued as a measure of economy. As a natural consequence, he soon lost his reckoning, and last Sunday morning commenced a vigorous attack upon his wood pile, fully believing it was Saturday. He did not discover his mistake till he saw his neighbors passing for church, when he became so shocked at his involuntary desecration of the Sabbath, that he immediately expressed his determination to renew his subscription without delay.

GODEY FOR MARCH. Mr. Godey, in his dealings with his friends, is as punctual as the Dial of Old Time; with the return of each month, we are sure to find his magazine on our table; and we rejoice at this—otherwise we might hear complaints and regrets, where we like to see smiles and sunshine; for the Lady's Book, in our family, is held in such esteem, that a single omission would be felt as a serious evil. The present number has all the freshness of spring, and is an offering worthy of the season. The frontispiece is a fine mezzotint engraving—a picture of the affections; which awakens the sympathies of our nature, and mentally to respond to the feeling, that "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE CONTINENTAL MONTHLY. The March number of this new and beautiful Magazine is before us. It is filled with contributions from Hor. G. P. Disney, Richard B. Kimball, A. Oakley Hall, Henry P. Leland, Bayard Taylor, Edward Atkinson, Rev. W. Frothingham, Edward S. Rand, Jr., Miss Delia L. Colton, A. M. Griswold, Chas. G. Leland and other distinguished writers; and is a very superior number. It is for sale at A. Williams & Co.'s, 100 Washington St., Boston, and at Geo. L. Gil's, in this town.

RELIGIOUS. Rev. Mr. Heath will preach next Sunday morning upon the Victory over the Beast. In the afternoon the Christian Greatness of Washington.

HEAVY GIRLS. There is a gentleman in Newburyport, who has three daughters of the ages of fourteen, seventeen and twenty, whose aggregate weight is 530 pounds.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 17th inst., Mr. Dennis Mortari, aged 46 years.

In Hingham, on the 17th inst., Mr. Wm. Sherburne, aged 48 years—a worthy and respectable man of color, for many years the faithful servant of Hon. Daniel Webster.

In Braintree, on the 20th inst., Mrs. Susan H., wife of Hon. Caleb Stetson, aged 59 years and 6 months.

The funeral will take place at his residence, East Braintree, this afternoon at 3 1/4 o'clock. In Boston, on the 14th inst., William Lunt, son of Mr. Thomas B. and Mrs. Anne P. Lunt of Framingham, aged 1 year, 8 months and 13 days.

Poetry.

The Dying Wife.

Lay the gem upon my bosom,
Let me feel her sweet warm breath;
For a strange chill o'er me passes,
And I know that it is death—
I would gaze upon the treasure—
Scarcely given ere I go;
Feel her rosy dimpled fingers,
Wander o'er my cheek of snow.

I am passing through the waters,
But a blessed shore appears,
Kneel beside me, husband dearest,
Let me kiss away thy tears.
Wrestle with thy grief, my husband,
Strive from midnight until day,
If my leave an angel's blessing
When it vanishes away.

Lay the gem upon my bosom;
I'm not long she can be there.
See! how to my heart she nestles,
'Tis the peace I love to wear.
If in after years beside thee,
Sits another in my chair,
Though her voice be sweeter music,
And her face than mine more fair;

If a cherub call thee—father!
Far more beautiful than this,
Love thy first born! Oh, my husband!
Turn not from the motherless.
Tell her sometimes of her mother—
You can call her by my name!
Shield her from the winds of sorrow,
If she err, oh! gently blame.

Lead her sometimes where I'm sleeping;
I will answer, if she calls,
And my breath will stir her ringlets,
When my voice in blessing falls.
Her soft, black eyes will brighten
And wonder whence it came;
In her heart, when years pass o'er her,
She will find her mother's name.

It is said that every mortal
Walks between two angels here;
One records the ill, but lo! it is,
If before the midnight dream
Man repenteth—if uncancelled,
Then he awakes it for the skies;
And the right hand angel weeps,
Bowing low with veiled eyes.

I will be her right hand angel,
Sealing up the good for heaven;
Striving up the midnight watches
Find no misdeed unforgiven.
You will not forget me, husband,
When I'm sleeping 'neath the sod?
Oh, love the jewel given us,
As I love thee—next to God.

Hours.

Tripping lightly through the sunshine,
Creeping 'mid the flowers gray,
Ever swiftly flitting, flitting,
Spreading the golden hours away.
Laden they with joy or sorrow,
Pain or pleasure, smiles or tears,
All are under sailing orders
Down the ebbing tide of years.

Hours are golden censers, bearing Incense offering evermore;
Shining coils, undying swiftly,
Till they reach the other shore
Among the links of time they bear,
Roasted o'er with bitter tears,
Light and shade are deftly woven
In the canopy of years.

Shen and shadow intermingle,
And the hours, so sweet and fair,
Change full of life to weary years,
Though the weight of age we bear,
Yet the cup of cruel bitter
May be to us for healing given;
And our funeral lamps be watch-fires
On the outer walls of heaven.

Happy hours! O, words can never Told their depth of meaning give;
Flow their benediction brightly
All the world in which we live!
Golden hours! like shining headlands
Jutting o'er the tide of Time;
Rising o'er the wrecks of sorrow,
Crown'd with majesty sublime.

Anecdotes.

A clergyman once made the following remark to a servant who had lived many years with him:
John, I dare say you will be able to preach a sermon as well as I.
O no, sir, said John, but many an inference I have drawn from yours.
Well, said the clergyman, I will give you a text out of Job—let me know what you infer from it:
"And the asses snuffed up the east wind."
Well said John, the only inference I can draw from this is, that it would be a long time before they would get fat upon it.

Some one was telling an Irishman that a fellow had eaten ten saucers of ice cream; whereupon Pat shook his head.
So you don't believe it?
With a nod, Pat answered: I believe in the cream, but not in the saucers.

At a militia training camp, east, after an order was given to "return ramrods," one of the soldiers broke from the line, and was off at full speed.
Hello! bawled the commanding officer, where are you going?
Down to Jones' shop to return the ramrod I borrowed," you said "return ramrods," didn't you?

Now, then, my hearties, said a gallant captain, you have a tough battle before you—fight like heroes till your powder's gone; then—run! I'm a little lame, and I'll start now!

Does the razor take hold well? inquired a darkey, who was shaving a gentleman from the country.
Yes, replied the customer, with tears in his eyes, it sure hold first rate, but it don't let go worth a cent.

Why, George, what are you hoeing in the garden for at this time o' night?
Well, I was awful dry, mother, and don't the Bible say, "No every man that thirsteth?"

PURE
LIQUORS AND
FOR PRIVATE USE AND
MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers, a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say that our experience of more than FORTY years as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and that every article sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue of goods, prices, &c.

HYPOPHOSPHITES

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Dyspepsia, Scrofula, Mar-asmus, Loss of Appetite, Neuralgia, Female Complaints, and
all Disorders of the Nervous
and Blood Systems.

This Remedy has obtained a great reputation for most EXTRAORDINARY CURES in ALL STAGES OF CONSUMPTION. It is recommended by many thousand Physicians in the United States and Europe—having been used with RESULTS UNPARALLELED in the ANNALS OF MEDICINE.

The Hypophosphites have a two-fold and specific action on the one hand, increasing the principle which CONSTITUTES NERVOUS ENERGY, on the other, being the most POWERFUL BLOOD GENERATING AGENTS KNOWN.

In cases of Nervous Debility, or Prostration of the Vital Powers, from any cause, this Remedy has no superior.

"Winchester's Genuine Preparation"

Is the only reliable form of the HYPOPHOSPHITES, made after the Original Formula of Dr. Churchill.

THE SPECIFIC PILL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness,
and Genital Irritability in either sex.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogues of human ills. It saps the very springs of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and strikes the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Aggravated Cases, either Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired—
Their effect has been truly wonderful. I used them in a case of Spermatorrhea, of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E. P. DICKER, M. D.

This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury, other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

PRICE—$1 per Box. Six Boxes for $5, by mail, prepaid. For sale by all respectable Druggists, and at the Sole General Depot in the United States, by J. WINCHESTER,

PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATIES

Physiological View of Marriage.

250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRA-
VINGS. Price only TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union. On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bluishings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling
interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College
Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c., &c.
It is a truthful adviser to the married and
those contemplating marriage, who entertain
secret doubts of their physical condition, and
who are conscious of having hazarded the
health, happiness and privileges to which
every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness,
pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in
the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and
lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, with melancholy, may be cured by
the author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON
TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our
time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the
knowledge and researches of the most skilled Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of
the many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS
REMEDIES which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may
rest assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SE-CRETARY and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished
us heretofore, as a Physician in our PECU-LIAR department of professional Practice, for the past twenty-five years.

FRENCH FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish
for Medicines, the efficacy of which has been tested in thousands of cases, and never failed
to effect speedy cures without any bad results,
will use none but Dr. DeLancy's Female Periodical Pills. The only precaution necessary
to be observed is, ladies should not take them
if they have reason to believe they are in
certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying
each box), though always safe and healthy,
so gentle, yet so active are they.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

The "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE."
For married ladies whose health will not admit, or who have no desire to increase their family, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and
has been extensively used during the last 20 years. Price reduced to $10.

HEBARD'S
PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid!

A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds
of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Spirit or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps
fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the great Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not
choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps
free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm
and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market
of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free
from Grease and Smoke, or unpleasant Odor,
and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it
is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.

State, County and Town Rights for sale,
with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.

Caveat applied for and granted Feb. 24th,
1860. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861.

The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon.
Wholesale 80 cents per gallon.

DR. MLANE'S

Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC,

OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an aure semicircular runs along the lower eyelids; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a snawing sensation of the stomach; at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not infrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hicough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. MLANE'S VERMIFUGE

Will certainly effect a cure.

The universal success which has attended the administration of this preparation has been such as to warrant us in pledging ourselves to the public to

RETURN THE MONEY

in every instance where it should prove ineffectual: "providing the symptoms attending the sickness of the child or adult should warrant the supposition of worms being the cause." In all cases the Medicine to be given in STRICT ACCORDANCE WITH THE DIRECTIONS.

We pledge ourselves to the public, that

Dr. M'Lane's Vermifuge

DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY

in any form; and that it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

Address all orders to

FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and also send but Dr. M'Lane's Vermifuge by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post paid, to any part of the United States, one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one box of Vermifuge for thirteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

For sale by Druggists and Country Store Keepers generally.

Parting with a Child.

I. Mourning, tearfully,
Cold in the ground;
Early we laid him,
Under a mound.
Calm be his slumbers,
Through the long hours,
Under the waving grass,
Under the flowers.

II. Hands sweetly folded,
Eyes sealed in sleep,
Gentle stars watch him,
Summer clouds weep.
Sadness and sorrow reign
Now in our home,
There shall the missing
Never more come.

III. Never more near us
His voice shall be heard Softly as roses,
Gently wind stirred:
Now his low melody
Warbles above,
While we, in silence,
Mourn for his love.

Little Things.

A few short lines long merrily all convey.
A few dark clouds may mark a sunny day,
A few harsh words crush many a bleeding heart,
A few kind smiles may soothe affliction's smart.
And many things, but little in themselves,
If stored away on memory's ample shelves,
Will, as we pass down life's varied ways,
Prove a sweet balm, which oft a pain will save.

Tropics.

A debtor being severely questioned as to the reason of his not paying a just debt, replied: "Solomon was a very wise man, and Solomon a very strong one, but neither of them could pay their debts without money."

A buck, while being measured for a pair of boots observed—"Make them to cover the calf." "Gracious!" exclaimed the astonished snob, surveying his customer from head to foot—"I have not leather enough."

"Time tries all things." Just so; and he eventually leaves scarcely a grease spot of us.

The first of all virtues is innocence; the second is modesty; and neither departs without being quickly followed by the other.

A free press is the beginning of a free government, as a tavern, a blacksmith shop and a lawyer are the beginning of a village.

A good surgeon must have an eagle's eye, a lion's heart, and a lady's hand.

Eat little at dinner, less at supper, sleep a lot, and you will live long.

He who hath good health is young; and he is rich who owes nothing.

One hour's sleep before midnight is worth two after.

The happiest of pillows is not that which love first presses; it is that which death has frowned on and passed over.

Woman has found her true "sphere" at last; it is about twenty-seven feet round, made of hoops.

"Come, Bob, tell us how much you cleared by your speculation?" "Cleared! ah, cleared my pockets."

Insult another for his want of a talent you possess—he may have others which you want.

Friends that are worth having are not made but "grow," like Topsy in the novel. An old man gave this advice to his son, on his death-bed—"Never try to make a friend." Enemies come fast enough without cultivating the crop; and friends who are brought forward by hot-house expedients, are apt to wither long before they are fairly ripened.

A secession lady in Northwestern Missouri offers a premium for enough Yankee scalps to make a bed quilt. Perhaps she would like to take a whole Yankee as a comforter.

The soldier's great risk is that of becoming extinguished before he can become distinguished.

An excuse is worse and more terrible than a lie; for an excuse is a lie guarded.

An old lady wishing to show her minister how smart her son was, introduced him:—"This is my son John—John, blow your nose."

The only way for a rich man to be healthy; is to practice exercise and abstinence—to live as if he were poor.

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.

Government Banking in the United States, from 1690 to the present time.

If the rise and fatal consequences of the Mississippi scheme in France, and of the South Sea delusion in England, afford lessons of instruction to men who would act wisely as individuals, or to those who may be connected with speculative projects, and especially to those who are entrusted with the administrative or legislative affairs of a nation, we may assuredly refer to the history of "Currency and Banking" in this country for facts which ought to teach wisdom by experience. The facts and results herein given for mature consideration and instruction have been collected from the most authentic sources.

As early in Colonial history as 1690, a paper currency was circulated under the designation of Bills of Credit. For the redemption of these Bills, the Colonies which issued them, pledged their property and revenues. This appeared sufficient, or at least, plausible security for maintaining the standard value for which these paper bills were first exchanged. They may well be designated "The Paper Currency of Expediency." Their nativity occurred in the gravest, and, as was believed, at that time, to have been the most religious of the Colonies—Massachusetts—and strange as it may appear, was also the most warlike.

A maritime expedition was sent, in 1690, from New England against Quebec, attended comparatively by the resources of the Colony, with enormous expense. This expedition was placed under the command of Sir Wm. Phips, and consisted of thirty-four vessels, and about seven thousand men. The armament reached Quebec in safety, and attempted to bombard the fortress. After two gallant actions ashore, the New England forces were compelled to abandon the impracticable enterprise, and sailed down the St. Lawrence. Eight of the principal ships, with all on board perished in the Gulf. Montreal was at the same time, to have been attacked by land; but this design was also frustrated. This expedition was fitted out with great care, and at a large cost; and backed up by an unceasing and unremitting spiritual demonstration. Says Cotton Mather, "The wheel of prayer for them in New England, had been kept continually going round." So sure were they of success, that they neglected to provide means to meet the expenses of this disastrous campaign; anticipating that its favorable termination would reimburse the cost by plunder.

Therefore, to discharge the liabilities to which the Colonial administration was pledged, for paying the amount due, Bills of Credit were issued by Massachusetts. The other Colonies soon followed this very convenient example. Whenever an emergency arose, no expedient could have been more readily suitable to those who did not reflect on future emergencies.

The Bills of Credit, however, notwithstanding the Colonial pledges, soon depreciated, and gave birth to that pernicious variety of currencies—that is to say—the difference between specie and paper value, which has not yet disappeared—and, according to present statements, it is to be extended, and inflated, beyond all precedents in the history of banking in this country. At first, they depreciated, so far only, as to constitute a legalized tender for the payment of taxes and debts in New England, at the rates of six shillings paper, for a Spanish silver dollar. But the depreciation did not halt at these rates, but continued until they became about worthless.

In 1745, another expedition of a semi-crusade character was fitted out in Massachusetts against Louisbourg—a strong fortress at Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. It was successful in capturing that fortress; but the expense demanded a fresh issue of £2,000,000 to £3,000,000 in Bills of Credit, which were declared legal tender. The depreciation in 1745, was as follows, viz: £100 sterling in specie, or a bill on London, was equivalent in value to legal tender paper money of New England, £1100; of New York, £901; of Pennsylvania, £180.

The war for our independence, like all modern wars, rendered indispensable the borrowing of money, and the issuing of paper Bills of Credit. Bills of Credit were issued by Congress in 1775 to the amount of $3,000,000; large sums were added afterwards. A depreciation in value was the natural consequence, although Congress made them a tender in payment of all private debts, and declared a refusal to receive them to be an extinguishment of the debt itself. This depreciation began to be seriously felt, early in the year 1777, and increased with the increase of issue. In September, 1779, the issue amounted to $160,000,000; when Congress declared, that, on no account, should they ever exceed $200,000,000; and Bills to this amount were issued, before the close of that year; a sum too large to admit of a redemption at par, and in the course of the years 1780 and 1781 the bills entirely stopped circulation. Nor has any part of them ever been redeemed, except at one hundred for one, under the funding system, established by the government. Soon after the death and burial of the Continental money, at the suggestion of Robert Morris, Superintendent of Finance, Congress established a national bank, by the name of "The Bank of North America." This bank of North America was not a chartered bank. It was instituted under an ordinance agreeable to the articles of Confederation. Its capital was too limited; therefore it was unable to provide a sufficient circulating medium for the United Republic, and proved a failure. The war during its continuance, had annihilated a specie currency, by preventing the importation of money. After the failure of this, the first bank established in America, the community were without banking facilities. The several States took the matter into their own hands, and again resorted to the Colonial expedient of issuing Bills of Credit, and framing tender laws. Under the latter, personal property was sometimes made a tender for payment of individual debts; the value of the property being decided by appraisers. This method of financing proved still more disastrous.

On the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the issuing of Bills of Credit was abolished. Gold and silver were alone declared to be a legal tender—either for the payment of taxes, or of personal debts. This measure was prudent, but it was embarrassing when it was ascertained, that for a circulating medium, there existed in specie only the savings of thrifty and non-speculating individuals, who would not consider it prudent, under a state of circumstances, to risk the fruits of non-expensive habits, and of industry; and that no more than $2,000,000 constituted the banking capital of the whole United Republic. This capital was invested in the bank of North America, the bank of New York, in the city of New York, and the bank of Massachusetts, in Boston. It became absolutely necessary to provide for the general emergency. Mr. Alexander Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury in 1790, boldly recommended the establishment of a national bank, under the charter to be granted in accordance with an act to be passed by Congress for the purpose. Both Jefferson and Madison strongly opposed this projected institution—but it was finally chartered, and in 1791, went into operation, with a capital of about ten millions of dollars. The charter of the bank was limited to the 4th of March, 1811. The annual dividends of this bank had been 8 1/2 per cent. In 1809, Mr. Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury, recommended a renewal of the charter; which was refused, and the bank expired; this was brought about by the combined efforts of the State banks and politicians.

The war of 1812 followed, and the State banks furnished to the Government the greater part of the loans, in order to carry on the war—and at the same time, aided in the collection and disbursement of the revenue. This increase of paper money, and the depreciation of commerce, occasioned the banks south of New England to suspend specie payment. Depreciation followed, and the Government raised loans for carrying on the war, upon the most disadvantageous terms; the bank currency having depreciated twenty per cent. In 1814, Mr. Dallas against his own views, proposed a scheme for a national bank, with a capital of $50,000,000. The details of this bill became a subject of serious debate in the House, and every attempt to amend the Bill, so as to make it a specie-paying bank, was unsuccessful. On the third reading of the Bill, a motion was made by Mr. Webster, to recommit the Bill to a select Committee, for the purpose of having the specie clause added. In his speech on the recommitment of the question, the following succinct remarks are to be found:

"What sort of an institution is this?" Mr. Webster asked; "it looks less like a bank than a department of Government. It will be properly the paper money department. Its capital is Government debts; the amount of its issues will depend on Government necessities; Government, in effect, absolves itself from its own debts to the bank, and, by way of compensation, absolves the bank from its own contracts with others. This, indeed, is a wonderful scheme of finance. The Government is to grow rich, because it is to borrow without obligation of repaying—and is to borrow of a bank, which issues paper, without liability to redeem it. A bank, which does not pay; is to guarantee the engagements of a Government which does not pay! John Doe is to become security for Richard Roe. Thus, the empty vaults of the treasury are to be filled from the equally empty vaults of the bank; and the ingenious invention of a partnership of insolvents, is to restore and re-establish the credit of both!"

The House was divided on the Bill, and the votes were eighty-one in the affirmative and eighty in the negative. The Speaker being opposed, gave his vote in the negative; thus the Bill was lost. The next day it was reconsidered, and referred to a select Committee, who soon after reported the same Bill, with some amendments, which was passed by a large majority. This Bill was returned with the President's veto, and not being repassed by a two-third vote, did not become a law.

To enable the Government to prosecute the war, the Senate immediately passed another bill, in accordance with the views of the Secretary of the Treasury—which was sent to the House on the 13th of February, 1815, and would have been passed but for the arrival of the news of peace with England. At the very moment when the question was to be taken on the passage of the Bill, the mail arrived from New York, bringing a letter to one of the members, put in as the mail was closing, informing him that a rumor had just reached the city of a vessel being at the Hook, bringing news of peace. On this being apprized of this, they immediately adjourned; about taking the question, and the next day the news being confirmed, the Bill itself, was indefinitely postponed, and the subject of a bank was no further agitated this session of Congress.

In 1816, a Bill was finally carried for the purpose of establishing a United States bank, and the charter signed by the President, on the 10th of April of the same year. The bank of the United States did not immediately commence business. It was considered necessary first to provide for the disordered state of the currency, and against future depreciation. To secure this desirable object, a special agent was sent to Europe to contract for specie; $7,311,750, was imported into the United States between July 1817, and December 1818, for the use of the National Bank, at an expense of $535,277.—This bank continued to transact business, until President Jackson took the "responsibility," and gave it its mortal blow. During the Telford Houses, and was vetoed by President Tyler. Thus, from 1836 to the present time, has the United States been without a National bank. Still, in the mean time there have been great revolutions in business; caused not so much for the want of a National bank, as the necessity of having a suitable specie basis for the currency, which would enable the community to meet all emergencies, and prevent the banks from suspending specie payment; which, in the following opinion of John Quincy Adams, is no honorable transaction.

"We are now," says Mr. Adams in referring to the suspension of 1837 in the midst of a national bankruptcy, occasioned by the insolvency of multitudes of individuals. We are told that all the banks in the United States have suspended specie payment—and what is the suspension of specie payment, but setting the laws of property at defiance? If the president and directors of a bank, have issued a million of bills, promising to pay five dollars to the holder of each, and every one of them, the suspension of specie payments is, by one act, the breach of one million of promises. What is this but fraud upon every holder of their bills? And what difference between the president and directors of such bank, and the skillful artist who engraves a bank bill—the fac simile of the bill signed by the president and directors, and saves them the trouble of signing it, by doing it for them? The only difference I can see in the two operations is, that the artist gives evidence of superior skill, and superior modesty. It requires more talent to sign another man's name than one's own, and the counterfeit does, at least, his work in the dark, while the suspender of specie payments brazen it in the face of day, and laughs at the dupes and victims who have put faith in their promises!" A Joke as a Medicine.

Mirth is healthful, and a joke has before now done good like a medicine. Dr. John Brown, for instance, tells the following story: I may give an instance, when a joke was more and better than itself. A comely young wife, the "cynosure" of her circle, was, indeed, apparently dying from swelling and inflammation of the throat, an inaccessible abscess stopping the way; she could swallow nothing; everything had been tried. Her friends were standing round her bed in misery and helplessness. "Try her wit a complaint," said her husband, in a not uncomic despair. She had genuine humor, as well as her wit, and as physiologists know, there is a sort of mental tickling which is beyond and above control, being under the reflex system, and instinctive as well as sighing. She laughed with her whole body and soul, and burst the abscess, and was well.

The Death of Children.

Those who have never lost a child are unable to understand how great a void the death of one little one can make. There is, we think, nothing on earth that can cast so long and so black a shadow as a small coffin. It is emphatically the shade of death that freezes a parent's heart. Small as is an infant's tomb, it sometimes is capacious enough to hold the brightest hopes and dearest joys of a whole family circle. The little child is often the bright focus where all the rays of gladness in the household centre, and from which they are reflected again over happy hearts—and when this central light is eclipsed, great darkness fall over all.

How many of these must be in Heaven, gathered up from all climes, even from heathen shores, who have died so young as to retain no memory of earth, and to whom the world of glory seems as their native land; whose souls were washed and regenerated so early that no stain of this world was ever visible there.

Whatever wound of sin there may have been has healed without a scar; there every thought has been moulded by the scenery and society of Heaven, and they stand continually before the Father. In how large a sense may we say, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

The Love of Home.

It is only shallow-minded pretenders who either make distinguished origin a matter of personal merit, or obscure origin a matter of personal reproach. Taunt and scoffing at the humble condition of early life affect nobody in America but those who are foolish enough to indulge in them, and they are generally sufficiently punished by public rebuke. A man who is not ashamed of himself, need not be ashamed of his early condition. It did not happen to me to be born in a log cabin; but my elder brothers and sisters were born in a log cabin raised among the snow drifts of New Hampshire, at a period so early that when the smoke first rose from its rude chimney and curled over the frozen hills, there was, as the saying is, no other settler's smoke on the rivers of Canada.

Its remains still exist. I make to it an annual visit. I carry my children to it, to teach them the hardships endured by the generations which have gone before them. I love to dwell on the tender recollections, the kindred ties, the early affections, and the touching narratives and incidents which mingle with all I know of this primitive family abode. I weep to think that none of those who inhabited it are now among the living; and if ever I am ashamed of it, or if ever I fail in affectionate veneration for him who reared it, and defended it against savage violence and destruction, cherished all the domestic virtues beneath its roof, and, through the fire and blood of a seven years' revolutionary war, shrunk from no danger, no toil, no sacrifice, to serve his country, and to raise his children to a condition better than his own, may my name, and the name of my posterity, be blotted forever from the memory of mankind.—Webster.

The Defence of the Beard.

There are more solid inducements for wearing the beard than the mere improvement of a man's personal appearance and the cultivation of such an aid to the every-day diplomacy of life. Nature, combining, as she never fails to do, the useful with the ornamental, provides us with a far better respirator than science could ever make, and one that is never so hideous to wear as that black seal upon the face, that looks like a passport to the realms of suffering and death. The hair of the moustache not only absorbs the moisture and miasma of fogs, but it strains the air from dust, and the soot of our great smoky cities. It also acts in the most scientific manner, by taking heat from the warm breath as it leaves the chest, and supplying it to the cold air taken in. It is not only a respirator, but with the beard entire we are provided with a comforter as well; and these are never left at home like the umbrella and other such appliances whenever they are wanted. We have heard Modist and Livingstone, the African explorers, and many other travelers, say that at night no wrap equal the beard. The remarkable thing is, too, that the beard, like the hair of the head, protects against the heat of the sun; it acts as a thatch does to the ice-house; but more than this, it becomes moist with the perspiration, and then by evaporation cools the skin.

A man who accepts this protection of Nature, may face the rudest storm and the hardest winter. He may go from the hottest room into the coldest air without any dread, and we verily believe he might sleep in a morass with impunity—at least, his chance of escaping the terrible fever would be better than his beardless companion's. That our soldiers and sailors, who have to endure every climate in the world, should be made to travel about with razors in their knapsacks, is as absurd and useless an encumbrance as making them carry a complete set of shoe brushes. The men would look better and feel better if they were allowed to wear the beard neatly trimmed; and there is no doubt that the inviolable which is now so serious a burden to this country would be much reduced—to say nothing of the comfort of the soldier and sailor, and these deserve some consideration against the arguments of Gen. Pipeclay and Admiral Tartar. Ten years' experience may have made us ourselves a little enthusiastic in favor of pagotrophy; but if a total immunity from toothache, relaxed vocal cords, colds, and all the host of ills to which we are now so liable, then we can cordially recommend the beard in all its glory.—Temple Bar.

Watch your Neighbors.

Take care of them. Don't let them stir without watching. They may do something wrong, if you do. To be sure you never knew them to do anything very bad, but it may be on your account they have not. Perhaps if it hadn't been for your kind care, they might have disgraced themselves and their families a long time ago. Therefore don't relax any effort to keep them where they ought to be; never mind your own business, that will take care of itself. There is a man passing along—he is looking over the fence—be suspicious of him; perhaps he contemplates stealing something some of these dark nights; there's no knowing what queer fancies he may have got into his head. If you see any symptoms of any one's passing out of the path of duty, tell every one else you can see, and be very particular to see a great many.

It, after all your watchful care, you can't see anything out of the way in any one, you may be sure it is not because they have not done anything bad; perhaps in an unguarded moment you lost sight of them—throw out hints that they are no better than they should be—that you should not wonder if people found any fault; then, as you are walking, keep it a going, and some one will take the hint and begin to help you after a while.—Then there will be music, and all will work to a chorus.

Woman's Grave.

We can pass by the tomb of a man with somewhat of calm indifference, but when we survey the grave of a female a sigh involuntarily escapes us. With the holy name of woman, we associate every soft, tender, and delicate affection. We think of her as the young and bashful virgin, with eyes sparkling, and cheeks crimsoned with each impassioned feeling of the heart; as the chaste and virtuous matron, tried with the fulfils of the world, and preparing for the grave to which she must soon descend. There is something in contemplating the character of a woman that raises the soul far above the level of society. She is formed to adorn and humanize mankind, to soothe his cares and strew his path with flowers. In the hour of distress she is the rock on which he leans for support, and when fate calls him from existence her tears bedew his grave. Can you look upon her tomb without emotion? Man has always justice done to his memory—woman never. The pages of history lie open to one; but the meek and unobtrusive excellencies of the other sleep with her unnoticed in the grave. In her may have shone the genius of a poet with the virtues of a saint. She, too, may have passed along the sterile path of existence, and felt for others as we now feel for her.

Young Commanders.

George B. McClellan becomes commander of the army of the United States—half a million of soldiers—as he approaches the completion of his thirty-sixth year of life and closes his fifteenth of military career. Yet he is above rather than below the average years of the great captains whose names are hallowed down as the chieftains of their day and generation.

Alexander the Great had achieved a reputation at the age of eighteen. He ascended the throne before twenty, and at twenty-five he reached the zenith of his glory, having already conquered the world. He died before the age of thirty-two.

Julius Cæsar greatly distinguished himself before the age of twenty-two.

Hannibal joined the Carthaginian army in Spain at twenty-two, and was made Commander-in-Chief at twenty-six.

Charlemagne was crowned king at twenty-six—conquered Aquania at twenty-eight, made himself master of France and the greater part of Germany at twenty-nine, placed on his brow the iron crown of Italy at thirty-two, and conquered Spain at thirty-six.

Other great commanders attained their highest renown at early ages. Thus, Scipio Africanus, the elder, twenty-nine; Scipio Africanus, the younger, thirty-six; Philip of Macedon, twenty-five; Saxe, forty; Peter the Great of Russia, thirty; Charles the Twelfth of Sweden, thirty-four; Frederick the Great of Prussia, thirty-three; Pizarro, thirty-five; the First Napoleon, twenty-six; Dessaix, thirty-two; Soult, twenty-nine; Eugene Beauharnois, thirty-one; Gouvion, St. Cyr, Suchet, Oudinot, Ney, Lannes, Joubert, Victor, Murat, Marmont, McDonald, Bernadotte, Lefevre, Bessieres, and Duroc all acquired a high military reputation in the field before the age of thirty-five. With such historical facts in view it is unnecessary to nurse any fears as to the success of our new Commanding-General on the score of "youth."—Rochester Union.

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

THE STORM ON MONDAY.—DISASTERS BY FIRE AND FLOOD. The gale on Monday night was most severe. During the day the weather was quite spring like; but after night fall, the wind veered round to the south west, with a freezing atmosphere, accompanied by snow and sleet, and blew a perfect hurricane. At its height, about half past nine o'clock, a fire broke out in Boston, the most disastrous that has occurred in that place for years. It caught in the upper story of a high brick building, known as Matthew's Block, extending from Commercial to North streets, between Fleet and Clark streets. The origin of the fire is not explained. The high winds, drove the flames along with a fury that could not be withstood by the firemen, whose exertions were never more unremitting. The fire went through the buildings towards Commercial street like a whirlwind, and soon threw a heavy sheet of flame across Commercial street to another large block on the corner of Commercial street and Sargeant's wharf. There were quite a number of wooden buildings in the square where the fire originated, and these were soon emptied of their contents, as it was evident that they were doomed. The fire spread rapidly towards the water from Commercial street, to the northern side of the East Boston Avenue. A large space was burnt over, and a great amount of property destroyed.

The damage to our shipping, was also considerable—many disasters have already been reported.

Buildings, chimneys and windows were not exempt from the fury of the storm, but shared in the general ruin.

A small house in South Weymouth was blown down, but the amount of loss is not large.

The steeple of the Congregational Church in West Amesbury was toppled over, and fell with a loud crash. The damage done will probably amount to one or two hundred dollars.

On the Old Colony Railroad, several of the morning trains for Boston, were detained at our depot, by a heavy covering of ice, nearly a foot thick, which had collected on the track during the night, and which had to be removed before they could proceed—causing a delay of several hours, as they did not reach the city until near ten o'clock.

At New York, several vessels in the harbor dragged their anchors, but no serious damage was done. All Western telegraphic communication was cut off. Five two story buildings were blown down in Brooklyn; also two steeples on the Rev. Mr. Farley's church. A portion of the roof of the Brooklyn City Hospital was blown away. Sign boards, awnings and other loose appendages were very promiscuously scattered about.

In Washington, houses were unroofed—trees blown down, and signs and awnings destroyed. The roof of the Library of Congress was blown off. It was of thick glass; and along the Potomac, accounts have been received of serious injury done to property.

BACK AGAIN. Our neighbor, Mr. Lombard, who left us for a short season, to try his fortunes in another section of the town, has returned to his old quarters, much improved in health, experience and finances. For the times, Mr. L. resumes business, under very flattering auspices. He brings with him a fresh stock of goods, adapted to the season, which have been selected, with care, and purchased for cash at the lowest market prices. To his friends and former patrons, who have heretofore, so generously bestowed upon him their patronage, he would invite their examination. He is sure he can please them, and that he can make it for their interest to entrust him with their orders.

His card, which appears in another column of our paper to-day, tells the whole story in a few words.

Mr. Heath will preach next Sunday morning on the great theological drama. Afternoon, evening and paying debts.

Letter from Co. C Mass. 24th.

OFF ROANOKE ISLAND, Feb. 8, 1862.

Dear Parents:—Being Corporal of the Guard for the next twenty-four hours, and having just stationed them on board this boat,

I take this opportunity to write, as the steamer S. R. Spaulding sails to-morrow for Port-ress Monroe. The Expedition started on the 5th from the Inlet, and on the next day anchored in sight of Roanoke Island, and saw

with a spy-glass two or three rebel gunboats.

On the 7th, it being pleasant, we started from our anchorage at about 10 o'clock, and commenced firing on the rebel battery and gun-boats at 11 1/2 o'clock, at long range. The troops are all on board transport steamers and schooners, except single companies which remain on board some of the gunboats.

Our company remains on board this gunboat,

Vidette, which engaged the rebels with the rest of the fleet. The transports kept out of reach of the rebel guns. I can only give you a slight sketch of this engagement—but enough for you to get an idea of the fight.—

In the first place, you understand we have one rifled cannon, which is good for a long range, besides two howitzers, which throw shell smartly, therefore we don't go so close to the battery as some of the other gunboats.

The engagement commenced in earnest, and soon down went the rebel flag staff, and the shells flew thicker and faster around the rebel battery, making the sand fly. Soon the rebel flag was raised on another pole. The rebels fight well, but their shot fall short—the most of them. The second shell we fired set their battery on fire, and it is blazing finely. Again another shot from another of our boats knocked the d—l out of the smoke

stack, and a mast from a rebel gunboat, and they are steaming off.

We are in a bad situation, for the rebels

have old hulks sunk, piles drove and chains

across the channel so that our gunboats can't get at them. They keep a long shot off and do not help the battery a whit. They dare not come within range of our gunboats.

4 o'clock P. M., our troops are landing out of range of the rebel battery. The fire still rages in the fort, and they keep firing—but not so fast. The rebel flag is still flying and it is getting dark. Shortly after the firing stopped, our boats hauled off; we are now

at anchor as if nothing had happened.

Evening—I am on deck smoking my meerschaum. I can see our Campfires on shore, and I suppose our troops are still landing.—

The rebel barracks are still blazing up—

effect to day, that I can feel, but their battery has been literally covered with bursting bombs—but they hold out well.

Saturday, February 8th—stormy, light wind N. E., but looks breaking away. It is so thick that we can not see with a spy-glass.

There are five rebel schooners either landing or taking off troops. Our gunboats exchanged shots with the battery a few times and then hauled off. Our land forces have commenced firing, and some excitement prevails aboard now. We did not know what those on shore were doing, but have since found out partly. Hurrah! the American flag is floating over the rebel battery.

I think the rebels kept a few men in the battery firing one gun, while they were taking off their troops. I think what remained must have fallen into our hands, but we have not got the particulars from shore yet. I expect we shall see some hard fighting after we leave here, but can not find out where we are going—only surmise.

I am well and enjoy the sport so far. We have had some balls whistling around our heads, but the largest part of their shot did not reach us. I hope this letter will find you all well at home. I forgot to mention that there is a rebel battery on the other shore to the westward of us. There has been a large fire in that direction burning about all night;

we think the rebels have burnt it in order to prevent its falling into our hands, and have

I think, retreated towards Norfolk. I guess

we shall head that way.

Sunday morning, 9 o'clock—cloudy, wind

N. E., have not heard any more news from shore. I must now close this letter as our mail is going on board the S. R. Spaulding

—by the way, I had a good dish of baked beans and some good coffee this morning.—

The fleet is all lying around here as peaceable as lambs; the next time you hear from me I guess we shall be up towards Norfolk.

Yours respectfully,

PEREZ CHEBUECK, JR.

THE PAY OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS. The pay of the United States army is mostly greater than any other in the world. The Russian soldier receives annually only thirty-

six dollars a year as pay, and his rations consist solely of black bread. The soldier in the French army receives fifty-six cents a month. The pay of our soldiers is twenty times greater. The estimate in the French budget for 1860 was $64,687,500 for an army

on a war footing of 702,765 men, and, in addition, a reserve militia on a peace footing of 415,746 men. It costs the United States

nearly three times as much to maintain a soldier as it does the British government—and it is to be remembered that the British government can get money at three per cent. interest, while it costs us six per cent. or more.

THE LATE ROBBERY. Some of the facts connected with the late robbery of Mr. Adams, of this town, who was relieved of his pocket book, containing two hundred and twenty dollars, by the dexterous hand of some adroit rogue, at the funeral of Dr. Bell, in Charlestown, on Tuesday, of last week, throws new light upon American society, which it would be well for those who have occasion to visit crowded assemblages to remember. Mr. Adams says he carried his money in what he considered a safe pocket—one which had never failed him before—and that in five minutes after the theft was committed, he discovered it; when he made known his loss to a police officer—who arrested a notorious character—had him taken to the police station and searched; but as nothing was found upon him, he was released. But, said the officer, I knew my man, and had my eye on him; and am sure, though there were found no traces of guilt about him, that he is the one, Mr. Adams, who took your money; for he is an artful dodger, and has given us much trouble; who never visits such places, unless in company with accomplices, of both sexes—who serve him as spies, and as safe depositaries of stolen property, when hard pushed.

There is but one feeling among our people, in respect to Mr. Adams—that of deep sympathy for his misfortune—especially as it overtakes him at a time when he is sorely tried by domestic affliction.

The Abduction Case.

Our readers will recollect the affair of the abduction of a child at Nahant, about a year and a half ago. The subject is before the Superior Court, now being held at Salem, the facts submitted to the Court, are substantially as follows:

In the summer of 1860, Mr. Henry G. Rice, a native of Boston, but then and for many years previously a resident of Baltimore, returned to New England for a season, and established himself at his mother's summer residence, Nahant. He took with him his son, a lad nine years of age, who was placed in the school of William E. Fete, at that place. Mr. Rice, like the majority of masculine summer residents of Nahant, was accustomed to pass business hours in the city. Mr. Fete's school was located in the village chapel. On the fourth day of August, which was a Saturday, the common quiet of this Dual Temple of education and of worship—was disturbed by an intrusion of three men, of whom one seized the prosing Mr. Fete, a second held a club threatening-wise over his head; while the third seized Master Charles, Mr. Rice's son, rushed out, and was quickly followed by his confederates. All this occurred at the time when a majority of that hour betake themselves to sight seeing from the wharf; the time to wit, of the arrival of the steamboat from Boston. And the child has not been seen by his father since the morning of that day.

Two persons were arrested at the time, and were held to answer to a charge of kidnapping. But though the grand inquest for Essex county found a true bill in January of last year, the case has slumbered until now. The indictment alleges in three counts that Amos R. Nickerson and Edwin P. Smith, in and upon Charles Allen Thorndike Rice, did make an assault against his will, and against the will and without the consent of his lawful guardians, did carry him away beyond the borders of this Commonwealth.

The Attorney gave a history of the domestic difficulties of Mr. and Mrs. Rice, from which it appears that they had had several quarrels and reconciliations, but that finally Mrs. Rice procured a decree of divorce in Indiana—custody of the child being given to the mother. Subsequently it was agreed that the father should have the custody of the child; but that he should remain with the mother a certain time. Under this arrangement Mr. Rice was allowed frequent interviews with the child, but these resulting in a disregard of parental authority, Mr. Rice prohibited them. Subsequently the judgment of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts gave Mr. Rice custody of the child. The witnesses were then called.

Mr. Rice testified to the abduction of the boy, and his diligent search for him without avail, although at Standstead (C. W.) he learned that the boy was at Standstead Plain, Wm's Hotel, dressed in girl's clothes, and dark wig, with three females in black, from Tuesday, 14th August, to Saturday evening, 18th August, and from thence was taken to Daniel Kelley's, near Derby Centre, in company with the three women—said Kelley having confessed that he was taken from his house Sunday, 26th August.

Other witnesses were examined, identifying the defendants at the bar, as parties concerned in the abduction.

A verdict was rendered by the jury, on Friday, February 21st, of guilty in the case of Amos R. Nickerson and Edward P. Smith, for the abduction of Charles Thorndike Rice. They were severally ordered to recognize in the sum of $5000 each for their future appearance. The case has cost the County upwards of a thousand dollars. It will go to the Supreme Court on exceptions.

Col. Pierce of the Twenty-ninth regiment, writes that his companies have a nomenclature of their own—Captain Brady's of Sandwich, are called the "Glass-Blowers;" Captain Trapp's of Taunton, the "Alewives;" Captain Richardson's the "Pigs;" Captain Sibley's of Charlestown, the "Pigs;" Captain Leach's of Plymouth, the "Countrymen;" Capt. Doten's of Bridgewater, the "Countrymen;" Capt. Clark's the "Obstacles;" Captain Wilcox's the "Qua Ducks." General Mansfield has honored this regiment by calling it the "balance-wheel" of his division.

THE JAPANESE PRESENTS. The Presents received by the President of the United States from the Tycoon of Japan, are the finest ever seen in this country. A laquered box containing a letter thanking the President for the reception of his ambassadors—in most courtly phrase in characters as stately as those usually found upon the sides of a tea box, wrapped in the yellowest of yellow silk, with plenty of gilt. A sword of exquisite steel, with the handle bedded with large pearls and mounted in the finest gold. Blocks of crystal from the sacred Fusiama Mountain, of diamond clearness. Vases of antique bronze, exquisitely sculptured in relief, with tortoiseshell and stones of untold value. A punch bowl fit for a Cyclops to "wet his whistle" in, so large that the President's two sons curled up in it, and the cover put on. Candlesticks some four feet high, gold mounted, with vases of every variety of pattern and shape. An entire suit of armor quite worthy of the Middle Ages. A whole dinner set, with hundreds of pieces of Japanese crape, silk and brocade, form part of this royal present.

ILLEGIBLE SIGNATURES IGNORED. It is stated by one who knows, that a great many persons who write to the Government Departments on business receive no attention, for the reason that they write their names in such style as to be wholly unintelligible. Fancy signatures never trouble the clerks much; for the instant they discover trouble in deciphering them, the communications to which they are appended are thrown aside.

THE AUDITORS' REPORT has made its appearance. It is a large volume, extended beyond its usual dimensions, by the introduction of a list of our tax payers and delinquents and the disbursements of the town in the outfit of volunteers for the United States service. Every tax payer has an interest in its contents.

WINTER leaves us in rather a sorry mood. The weather through the week has been very tempestuous. The storm on Monday was the most severe of the season—and it does not appear to have spent its fury yet. Considerable snow has fallen, and our sleighing remains unimpaired.

Some weeks since we gave an account of the departure from Readville, of the 24th Regiment, (Col. Stevenson,) with a list of those attached to it from this town; their friends will be glad to get so good an account of them as the following, which we cut from the Boston Transcript:

TWENTY-FOURTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS. On reaching the shore at Roanoke Island, Colonel Stevenson and the officers of Co. G, his color guard, were the first to land. The column immediately presented on the wounded and dead were soon passed. Skirmishers were thrown out, right and left, and on emerging from the morass and thicket, Co. G was in front of the rebel lines. With a howitzer at their head, the boys prepared to charge, when the white flag was run up and 2500 of the "Southern chivalry" surrendered to the Flag Corps of the "glorious Twenty-Fourth."

ARMY GUNNERS. Some of the newspapers advise the soldiers, especially artillerymen, to wear oiled wool in their ears to protect them from the concussion. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger who professes to know, says, "No man's ears will be hurt by the report of artillery, if he will open his mouth." Just as we throw up a wish to prevent our glass being shattered by the discharge of cannon, so we should open our mouths to save our ears. The concussion comes then on both sides of the drum of the ear, and has no ill effect.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Our Country's Flag

[The following patriotic verses were composed by Thomas Crosby, while lying in the Annapolis Hospital from a wound received in the left wrist, at the battle of Bull Run. He belonged to the 24 Wisconsin Regiment, and has recently spent a few weeks in this place.]

The traitors marching to our camp,
With fearless strides, they mark their way,
With Southern rule they wish to stamp,
Our Constitution day by day.
Will freeman of this land submit,
To Southern rule and Southern power?
No! Our Northern pride will not permit,
A Southern foe our Flag to lower.

Over eighty years our Flag has waved—
A sacred trust, by heroes given—
From tyrants rule, this Flag has saved—
Our Country! by the help of Heaven.
Shall desecration rend it twain?
Shall traitors take the fragments from us?
No! Our Flag will guard from every stain,
Though flame and blood descend upon us.

Our Country must and shall be free,
From Southern foes and Davis traitors;
Let them boast and brag, but they shall see
That we want no such regulators.
Let them raise their snaking banner;
'Tis traitors' rule that we must spoil,
And throw disgrace and shame upon her.

Let us one and all unite,
To save our Country from oppression;
Let us join in Freedom's fight,
But never know the word transgression.
Let our banner proudly wave
Through all our land, in every section;
Affording comfort to the brave,
And wives and children, sure protection.

Ellsworth's Avengers

BY A. LORA HUDSON

Down where the patriot army,
Near Potomac's side,
Guards the glorious cause of freedom,
Gallant Ellsworth died.
Brave was the noble chieftain,
At his Country's call;
Hastened to the field of battle,
And was first to fall.

Strike, freemen, for the Union!
Sheathe your swords no more
While in arms remains a traitor
On Columbia's shore!

Entering the traitor city,
With his soldiers true,
Leading up the Zouave column,
Fixed became his view;
See that rebel flag is floating
O'er that building tall;
Spoke he, while his dark eye glistened:
Boys, that flag must fall!

Strike, freemen, &c.
Quickly from its proud position
That base flag was torn,
Trampled 'neath the feet of freemen,
Circling Ellsworth's form;
See him bear it down the landing,
Past the traitor's door.

Hear him groan, Oh, God, they've shot him!
Ellsworth is no more.
Strike, freemen, &c.

First to fall, thou youthful martyr,
Hapless was thy fate;
Hasten we as thy avengers,
From thy native State.
Speed we on, from town and city,
Not for wealth or fame,
But because we love the Union,
And our Ellsworth's name.

Strike, freemen, &c.
Traitors' hands shall never sunder
That for which you died;
Hear the oath our lips now utter,
Thou our Nation's pride:
By our hopes of yon bright Heaven,
By the land we love,
By the God who reigns above us,
We'll avenge the blood!

Strike, freemen, &c.

Anecdotes.

A dandy with more beauty than brains, married an heiress, who, although very accomplished, was by no means handsome. He said to her one day:
My dear, as ugly as you are, I love you as well as though you were pretty.
Thank you, love, was the reply; I can return the compliment, for foul as you are, I love you as well as though you had wit!

Sarah, said a young man to a lady of that name, why don't you wear earrings?
Because I haven't had my ears pierced.
I will bore them for you, then.
I thank you, sir; you have done that enough.

What are wages here? asked a laborer of a boy.
I don't know, sir.
What does your father get on Saturday night?
Get? said the boy, why he gets as tight as a brick.

Pat, you are wearing your stockings wrong side outward.
And don't I know it, to be sure? there is a hole on the other side.

HEBARD'S PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid!
A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.
THIS OIL is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Spirit or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid or Lamp Oil, with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as result generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.
It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Spermaceti and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.
The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke, and is pleasant Odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it is unexpensive.
Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.
State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.

On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bushings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c., &c. It is a truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, which entertains secret doubts of their physical condition, and who are conscious of having hazarded the health, happiness and privileges to which every human being is entitled.
YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness, pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, with melancholy, may be cured by the author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON TREATMENT.
We have recently devoted much of our time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the knowledge and researches of the most skilled Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of the many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDIES which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may rest assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SEVERE and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished us heretofore, as a Physician in our PECULIAR department of professional Practice, for the past twenty-five years.

For the past twenty-five years
Ladies who wish for Medicines, the efficacy of which has been tested in thousands of cases, and never failed to effect speedy cures without any bad results will use none but Dr. De La Croix's Female Pills, which are always safe, and healthy, so gentle, yet so active are they.
Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.
THE "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE" For married ladies whose health will not admit, or who have no desire to increase their families, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and has been extensively used during the last 20 years. Price reduced to $10.

HEBARD'S PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid!
A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.
THIS OIL is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Spirit or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid or Lamp Oil, with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as result generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.
It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Spermaceti and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.
The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke, and is pleasant Odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than all it is unexpensive.
Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.
State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.
Caveat applied for and granted Feb. 24th, 1860. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861. The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon. Wholesale 80 cents per gallon.
Orders solicited and filled with despatch. Letters promptly answered.

The sister States send out their sons and their daughters; The bright, the true-hearted, the gallant and strong;

How sweet the embrace of the pure and true-hearted, Worth more to the heart than bright silver and gold.

Each one has an influence—oh! may its power For the right be exerted wherever we go;

Each day that we pass—day, each moment and hour— Is fraught with some consequence we may not know;

Miscellaneous.

Awkward Jeremiah.

BY CAROLINE F. PRESTON.

A young gentleman, fashionably dressed and with the air of one who would be at home in society, reached Boston towards evening, by the Fitchburg Railroad. He proceeded at once to a hotel, not wishing to intrude upon his relatives at that hour, and took a comfortable supper. After this he read the evening papers and then went out for a stroll on Washington street. On his way he passed Vinton's well known establishment, and it being a warm evening, decided to go in and have an ice cream.

He accordingly ordered one, and while waiting to have it served, had an opportunity to look about him a little and take a leisurely survey of the company assembled. These were chiefly ladies, and to those who are at all familiar with Boston ladies, I need not say that the faces are very well worth looking at.

Our hero's attention, however, was attracted to two young ladies who sat at the table nearest his own. They were apparently about the same age, which could not have varied much from eighteen. Both too, were quite attractive in personal appearance.

They were conversing together in quite an animated strain on a variety of subjects. At length one said:

By the way, Emma, have I told you about the visitor we are expecting?

No, said the other.

It's a cousin from the country, who I suppose, will be a perfect rustic in every respect. Such fun as I expect to get out of him.

What is his name?

Jeremiah Onthank. I expect he will want us to call him Jerry.

The other young lady laughed. His name is rustic enough, certainly, she said. You must be sure and give me a chance to see him. Mustn't keep him all to yourself, Alice.

I don't intend to. I want somebody else to enjoy the fun.

Do you know how he looks?

No, but I can imagine. In the first place he is tall and awkward, not knowing what to do with his hands and feet; wearing cowhide boots, and a full suit of blue, including swallow tails, studded plentifully with brass buttons. There, what do you say to that picture?

Emma laughed.

I say this, she replied, that if he at all answers your description, he will make a decided accession to our society. When do you expect him?

To-morrow. Uncle wrote that Jerry, as he calls him, will probably arrive at that time.

I guess I shall make an errand to drop in by that time.

Do by all means.

With these words they rose from the table and left the room.

The young man had listened to their conversation with an air of mingled amazement and vexation. Not to keep the reader in suspense we will tell him what he has probably surmised, that the chance listener to the young ladies' remarks was none other than Jeremiah Onthank himself. He was quite the reverse of the picture his cousins had drawn, being as we have said, very gentlemanly, both in dress and address. He was born in Vermont, where his father, a good, honest farmer, still lived; but had enjoyed the advantages of education in a college in New York, where he had an opportunity to mingle in society. This fact was quite unknown to his cousin. In fact they were not first cousins, although the indefinite relationship was most conveniently expressed by that term. Hitherto the two families had known but little of each other.

I will pay her off, said the young man to himself, with a smile.

The next morning he visited a ready-made clothing establishment.

Have you any blue suits? he asked.

We have none made up recently. They are not fashionable in the city you know.

I am aware of that but I intend to do a little unquenching.

Want to personate a countryman? said the clerk smiling.

Precisely.

Then I think I can accommodate you.

Not long since, a countryman called in and ordered such a suit as you desire; but having been fleeced of his money by some sharper, was obliged to leave them on our hands.

The very thing! exclaimed young Onthank.

There is only one thing. He was not so tall as you, and they may be somewhat short in the sleeves and legs.

All the better. Such is the traditional country fashion. Will you let me see them?

The suit was accordingly shown.

Our hero at once put it on, and could not help laughing at the metamorphose which it produced in his appearance. He hardly recognized himself.

I think I will keep it on, he said, and have the others sent to my hotel. I want two articles more: some cowhide boots and a flaming red bandana, and then I shall be fully equipped.

The last mentioned articles were not difficult to procure.

An hour afterwards he knocked at the door of his relative's aristocratic residence.

Is Alice to him? he inquired of a servant.

I believe so, said the latter staring at him with eyes wide open.

Then go and tell her that her cousin Jerry wants to see her. If she's frying doughnuts or any thing, tell her I kin wait in the sittin' room.

The servant, stifling a laugh, went up and reported the arrival to Alice.

O, charming! said she, I was just thinking what I should do for amusement. I am so glad he's come.

Alice descended and entered the drawing room.

There stood before her the embodiment of the picture she had drawn the evening before.

How do you do cousin Alice? I'm Jerry Onthank. Expected me, didn't ye? So saying he strode towards his cousin, and grasped her taper fingers in a painful squeeze.

I'm very well, thank you, said she, suppressing a smile with difficulty. I hope you left your family well?

Fust rate! Dad's alive and kicking, and man's so's to be about—all well except the white heifer—she's took sick, and I'm afeard she won't get over it.

That's a great pity certainly, said Alice, with much sympathy.

I guess you'd think so. That ere critter used to give fifteen quarts of milk a day, which was sold to the milkman for three cents a quart. Most half a dollar a day clean gone.

It is certainly quite melancholy.

Yes, says he hesitatingly, looking perplexed.

When did you arrive in Boston?

Last night.

Where did you put up?

To the Tremont house. What d'ye yer think? The playney stage driver that took me there charged thirty-seven cents! I guess he said that I was from the country, and wanted to cheat me.

I believe that is the regular price, said Alice.

Sho! You don't though? Guess you're made of money in Boston! It's a big town, though.

It's pretty large.

I never seed so many brick houses in my born days. There's one thing I want to see, though.

What is it?

It's a ship. They have 'em in Boston, don't they?

O, yes, plenty of them at the wharves.

Couldn't you go out with me and take a walk down there? I s'pose you're there most every day.

It isn't exactly considered proper for a lady to walk down to the wharves.

Sho! Then you don't want to go?

I would rather walk on the Common. Have you seen that?

Yes I seed it this morning.

What do you think of it?

It's a confounded shame they should let so much good land go to waste. It would be pretty good to raise potatoes on. I've a great mind to tell the government I'll take it on shares.

I don't think it would do any good. They keep it for children to play on, and for the people to promenade.

To what?

To take walks.

Oh, that's the idea.

At this moment Miss Emma Dickinson, the other young lady was introduced.

Jerry made a shambling salutation, and the young ladies continued to ply him with questions, enjoying not a little his rusticity.

Two or three days elapsed. Jerry made his home at the aristocratic mansion of his cousin. It would take altogether too long to detail all the instances of his rusticity during that time.

At this time his cousin determined upon a party, chiefly in honor of a young lady from New York, a representative of the best society in that city, to whom Alice wished to do special honor.

When Jerry appeared to escort his cousin down stairs to the brilliantly lighted parlors, she was surprised that he was attired in fashionable style. In reply to her interrogatories, he said, I kind thought I'd like to dress a little more in Boston style, so I went out and bought some new clothes. They cost a mint of money, but darn the expense.

When I'm in Boston I'm going to do as the Romans do.

Alice was secretly glad of the change.

Really her cousin looked quite genteel, much more so than she had dreamed possible.

Entering the room where a number had already assembled, Miss Emma Dickinson took charge of our hero, while his cousin did the honors to the arriving guests.

Soon the New York belle arrived and was warmly received by Alice.

Some half an hour after, Jeremiah found himself near her. To his surprise he recognized a young lady whom he had met in society.

The recognition was cordial on both sides. They were conversing, unnoticed by Alice, when the music struck up for a quadrille.

Will you accept me in lieu of a better partner, Miss Vancouver? asked our hero.

The lady inclined her head in the affirmative.

They took a place opposite Alice and a young military gentleman.

Good heavens, thought she, how on earth did Jeremiah get introduced to Miss Vancouver! He will make us all ridiculous.

But she had no time for remonstrance. The music struck up.

To her surprise, Jeremiah went through the figure with perfect propriety. He did not jump about as she anticipated.

The quadrille over, she went up to the pair. I didn't know you had been introduced to my cousin, said Alice.

We have been acquainted for two years, said Miss Vancouver, quietly.

Where did you meet? asked Alice, amazed.

In New York, said her cousin, significantly. I was at that time a college student there.

Alice was overpowered with astonishment, which she managed to conceal, however, till the party was over, when her cousin made an explanation, adding with a smile, Cousin Alice, you were rather hasty in assuming that all who live in the country are clothe-poles.

If you will come to Vermont next summer, I hope to convince you to the contrary.

Alice visited Vermont, as invited. Her visit is likely to be a long one, as she has become the wife of the awkward Jeremiah.

Seventy Year Clocks.

Our brains are seventy year clocks. The Angel of Life winds them up once for all, then closes the case, and gives the key into the hand of the Angel of the Resurrection. Tic-tac! tic-tac! go the wheels of thought; our will cannot stop them; they cannot stop themselves; sleep cannot still them; madness only makes them go faster; death alone can break into the case, and seizing the ever swinging pendulum, which we call the heart, silence at last the clicking of the terrible escapement we have carried so long beneath our wrinkled foreheads.

For the Patriot.

Washington's Birth-Day in Milton.

[The following communication was not received until after our last week's paper was put to press; but, believing it still to be interesting to our many subscribers at Railway Village, we give it room in this number.]

The anniversary birth-day of the Father of his Country was appropriately observed in the Railway Village, Milton, on the 22d. In honor of the day, and of our recent brilliant victories to put down rebellion, joy was pictured on all countenances. In the morning, at noon, and at night, the bells of the two churches were merrily rung and the star spangled banner with its thirty-four silvery orbits, floated proudly from several of the buildings.

In the evening, at a few hours' notice, the patriotic citizens of that place and vicinity gathered in the new meeting-house, to participate in the exercises devised at a brief notice.

The programme was judiciously got up by the worthy chairman of the committee of arrangements, Josiah Babcock, Esq., who having called the meeting to order, presented the name of Jesse Burton, Esq., as president, which was unanimously accepted.

The president in the chair, appropriately stated the objects of the meeting—nearly every pew was filled with attentive auditors. Washington's Farewell Address was read with chasteness and pathos by Mr. G. S. Webster, the popular teacher of the East Grammar School of Milton; after which, from a call of the presiding officer, patriotic addresses were made by Doctors Rummer, Joseph R. Webster, Wm. B. Duggan, and Seth Dewing, Jr., Esq., principal of the Willard School in Quincy.

The exercises of the evening were interspersed by excellent singing from a full choir, accompanied with the organ, which added much to the interest of the proceedings. The flag of the Union, that glorious emblem of our liberty, was spread near the pulpit—long may it wave in unquelled honor, throughout the country's strongholds, on the tented field, and upon the wave-rocked topmast.

Altogether, the occasion was a felicitous

one, reflecting much praise upon the Union loving citizens of that pleasant village, who show by the large gathering and other demonstrations, that they were not behind other portions of our great community, in their love of country and its institutions of equal rights to all; and their high veneration to the memory of him who was first in War, first in Peace, and first in the hearts of his Countrymen.

Fort Good Hops—on the Potomac.

FEBRUARY 19, 1862.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

Upon the eastern branch, and distant three miles from Washington, is situated the camp of the 53th Regiment, New York Volunteers, regularly laid out in streets, and tastefully decorated with evergreen trees, that present a pleasing contrast with the long rows of white tents which constitute the abodes of the Volunteers. Soldiers. How they live and what they do, may be of interest to your readers, since this corps is represented by a large number from Quincy. Again the muffled drum and clarion notes of the fire, are sounding the requiem of one of our comrades, who is being borne to a soldier's grave. Now, intoxicating liquors are banished from the camp; vendors of liquors are promptly seized and summarily punished. Both officers and men are kept at their posts in camp, and a provost guard patrols the country night and day, challenging any officer and soldier for the exhibition of that important Pass, with the necessary autograph of "Little Mack." The 53th is one of the four Regiments that constitute the 2d Brigade of Gen. Cary's Division. Our Colonel, William Linn Tidball, is well worthy of the rank of Brigadier General; and it was the talk—but I think those thoughts have gone up in a balloon—if he had been appointed, doubtless that Major Wm. S. Northridge would have been presented to the Colonely; he served with distinction in Mexico, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of the entire Regiment. The Regiment is very impatient for an onward movement, since the victory achieved by our brave brothers at Fort Donelson. Those valiant (Home Guards) "Invincible in peace, invincible in war," lose sight too of the fact that this has also been a grand camp of instruction where newly formed Regiments are received, drilled, disciplined, and sent off upon naval expeditions, or dispatched to the service of our friends in the West; in this way, the army of the Potomac continually changes its individuality. For the last month, the roads and camps here have been so very muddy, that drills were mostly dispensed with, except occasionally, a dress parade.

Three weeks ago the Regiment was paid off; a large amount of money was sent home by different companies through Adams & Haden's Express. We are expecting daily, the arrival of the Allotment Commissioners, to explain to the men the "allotment system," by which soldiers may assign certain portions of their pay to their friends at home; thus we hope less money will be squandered with the Sutters; who, in the language of the Sanitary Committee, "promote drunkenness, vend bad liquors, strip the soldiers of their hard earnings, which should go to the support of their families; pamper them with stale and indigestible pies, and sow the seeds of ill health to a frightful extent. I most sincerely wish, that these unprincipled buccsters, who follow the army as sharks follow the ship, may be banished from the camp. The roars of artillery, for practice, can be heard, and the triumphant shouts of freedom's hosts, all go to make up a scene, that one may gaze on but once in a life time, and the remembrance of which, he will carry to the grave.

Yours truly, GEORGE B. PAGE.

Letter from Co. G. Mass 24th.

ROANOKE ISLAND, FEB. 16, 1862.

FRIEND EDITOR:—According to promise, I now take my pencil in hand to give you a slight account of our travels and also engagements at this place. We were put on board the transports, at Annapolis, Monday night January 9th, and lay off in the stream until the next Thursday morning when we sailed for Fortress Monroe. We had quite a pleasant sail, although we were densely enclosed by a fog all day Friday and did not make much headway, but it cleared up in the night and we made a bold push for the fortress, for it was in full sight. Came to anchor about noon and staid all the afternoon; but, towards them to do unto us. They must not only work, but wait. They must plod and persevere. Pence must be taken, because they were the seeds of goodness. To get on in the world, they must take care of home, sweep their own doorways clean, try and help other people, avoid temptations, and have faith in truth and God.—De Eraine's Lectures.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, March 8th, 1862.

TOWN MEETING. Through the kindness of our obliging Town Clerk, George L. Gill, Esq., we have the pleasure of presenting our readers with a full report of the doings of the annual town election on Monday last.—Also, the appointments made by the new board of Selectmen, for various offices.

THE LECTURE. Johnson's Hall, on Thursday evening, was crowded by our citizens to hear a lecture given by one of our townsmen, Lyndner S. Richards, on the "Duties and Rights of Women." The audience gave remarkable attention, and the speaker spoke in a free and easy manner. The subject was wisely chosen, and very ably handled; and the gathering appeared much pleased with the evening's entertainment.

BROTHERLY. We learn that the Unitarian and Universalist ministers in this place are to exchange to-morrow, that is, Rev. John D. Wells will preach in the Unitarian Church, and Rev. Mr. Heath in the Unitarian—both forenoon and afternoon.

ONE OF THE PRISONERS. It gives us great pleasure to be able to announce to our readers that Horace A. Derry has arrived safe and sound to his good old native town once more. It will be remembered by our citizens that he was Sergeant in Co. D, 20th Massachusetts Regiment and was taken prisoner at the battle of Bull's Bluff, October 21st, 1861. He related to us much information concerning the treatment which he and his fellow prisoners received during their confinement at Richmond; also many interesting particulars of the terrible slaughter at Bull's Bluff. He also showed us specimens of the confederate notes, some of which were of five cent denomination, which would seem to indicate that the government was rather short of money. A large number of the citizens of this town, gathered at his residence on Thursday evening to congratulate him on his safe return, and after partaking of a nice chowder, and spending an hour or two in agreeable conversation, returned to their homes well pleased with their evening's interview with the hero.

THE WORLD'S FAIR. Intending American exhibitors are advised by the London American to be exceedingly cautious about sending any thing for introduction that has not decided merit. New things, simply because they are new, find no favor with the staid, sober, comparatively slow-moving people of Europe.

DEMOCRATIC TOWN COMMITTEE. The following named gentlemen were chosen, on Saturday last, March 1st, the Democratic Town Committee of Quincy, for the year ensuing, viz:

William S. Pattee, M. D., South District; William B. Duggan, M. D., North District; William Chesley, Esq., West District; George Baxter, Esq., Quincy Point District; Arthur P. Hayden, South District; Richard Newcomb and P. McDonald, Centre Dist.

A VENERABLE RELIC. The editor of the Pawtucket Gazette has been made the custodian of the gun with which Gen. Putnam killed the wolf in a cave in Pemfret, (Conn.) It is an old Tower musket, and bears the English coat of arms. This gun is the property of Mr. Samuel T. Mallory, of Central Falls, in whose family it has been for many years.

YANKEE ENTERPRISE. The Taunton Gazette learns that a printing office and materials furnished by Messrs. Rogers & Co., the well known Boston type foundry, are on their way from Boston to Mexico, to be used in the publication of a new weekly journal at the territorial capital, to be known as the Santa Fe Republican. It will be edited and published by Kansas men and be a vigorous supporter of the war and of freedom.

COURT MOURNING in England for Prince Albert is thus ordered: Ladies to wear black silk dresses trimmed with erape, and black shoes and gloves, black fans, feathers and ornaments. The gentlemen to wear black court dress, with black swords and buckles and plain linen. This dress was changed in February, as follows: The ladies to wear black dresses with white kid gloves, black or white shoes, fans and feathers, and pearls, diamonds or plain gold or silver ornaments. The gentlemen to wear black court dress, with black swords and buckles. The court was to remain in mourning, till the 10th of the present month.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, MARCH 6, 1862.

The Ides of March, according to the Roman calendar, are near us; but winter still lingers in the lap of spring—producing an unfavorable influence with business men. This will not long continue; for, as the weather becomes milder, we shall see a general and healthy re-action of most branches of enterprise. The Broker's Board from day to day, reports the financial market in a good condition.

The Treasury Note Bill having been signed by the President, is now a law of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in notes, not bearing interest—or no less denomination than five dollars, payable to bearer at the United States Treasury. These notes are receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts and demands of every kind due to the United States, except duties on imports, and for claims of all kinds against the United States except interest on bonds—or notes which is to be paid in coin. And here is the pith of the whole bill. They (the bills) shall also be lawful money and legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest. Duties on imported goods must be paid in coin, or in demand notes heretofore issued. The coin so paid is set apart as a specie fund to be applied to the payment of interest on coin; to the payment of one per cent. on the entire debt of the United States, and the residue payable to the Treasury.

At last, we have reported from the Committee of Ways and Means in Congress, the Tax Bill. They have labored hard for three months past to complete this enormous document, exceeding one thousand pages folio, and containing one hundred and eight sections. This famous bill reaches every class of property, except real estate, and is so framed as to tax property in transit, from one person to another. It proposes raising one hundred and fifty millions of dollars per year, for the payment of the interest on the public debt, and for carrying on the Government and war.

It is now estimated that Massachusetts will have to raise her quota—some fourteen hundred thousand dollars—and if this estimate is correct, the town of Quincy will be assessed for direct tax, some six thousand dollars; making the Town, County, State, United States tax and overlays, in the aggregate, some thirty-four thousand dollars; and probably carrying up the rate per cent. at $1 on the hundred, or $10 on every thousand. These calculations may not be correct—but they are pretty near so.

Legislative matters at the State House, are progressing slowly. The repeal of the "Two Years' Amendment to the Constitution," relative to voters, will go through the present Legislature, with not a corporal's guard of opposition. It must pass the same ordeal of Legislation next winter, and then go to the people for ratification. The repeal is destined to be put through, and no mistake. The discussion in favor of the repeal, was able and eloquent. The speeches of Mr. Cushing of Newburyport, and Pierce of Dorchester, were tip top, and called forth the admiration of the House.

The Bill concerning the Hingham and Quincy Turnpike and Bridges was considered in the Senate, on Tuesday, at great length, in its effects upon the Corporation—the towns immediately interested, and the people of the counties of Norfolk and Plymouth; it was amended by providing that the towns and counties may have a right to appeal from the award of Commissioners equally with the Corporation, and that the act shall not take effect without its acceptance by the Corporation as amended; the Bill was ordered to a third reading.

ARMY LETTERS. Owing to the careless manner in which thousands of letters are addressed to soldiers in the army, many of them never reach their anxious expectants, and we therefore publish the following suggestions, which, if properly followed, cannot fail of being effective.

1st. Address every soldier by his rank.—The "Esq's" and "M's," are left at home.

2d. If the soldier be a member of a company, direct to the care of the Captain, by name, designating the company by its letter.

3d. Put on the name of the regiment in plain figures.

4th. It is better to give the State written in full.

5th. Never put on the name of a camp. This is the most fruitful cause of the miscarriage of army letters.

GLEASON'S LITERARY COMPANION. This brilliant literary star of New England, commenced in its last issue, a number of new stories, in which the public have an interest.

A GOOD IDEA. A contemporary says he hopes if the bill to tax newspapers in proportion to their circulation is passed, there will be a section in it for the Government to take its pay in the bills of delinquent subscribers.

There will be a free chowder at the Hancock Billiard and Bowling Saloon, this evening.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

Twice a week a car provided with beds leave Washington for the accommodation of sick and wounded soldiers.

The present is the ninth time that the town of Torre del Greco has been destroyed by Vesuvius.

It is stated that United States Treasury notes command thirty per cent. premium in the Southern States. They are rated equivalent to gold, and much sought after.

Thomas D. Blossom, senior publisher of the Hingham Journal, has three sons in the army.

At a recent city election in Oskaloosa, Iowa, Mrs. Nancy Smith, Democrat, was elected Mayor by a majority of twenty-one over the Republican candidate for that office.

At the siege of Fort Donelson, the feeling was so strong against Floyd that several of the Confederate soldiers fired at him as he was leaving.

The Slidells have taken a house for four years' residence in Paris—safest thing they could do. Perhaps Jeff. Davis will want to board with them.

A young man named Theodore Call, aged 19, died at Cleveland, recently, from excessive bleeding at the nose. Every effort had been made to stop the hemorrhage, but all in vain.

A smart blacksmith, says the Providence Press, is Mr. Charles Scott, of South Franklin, Mass. During six days, without assistance, he sharpened the shoes of eighty-three oxen, making all the nails himself; and in one day, he shod twenty-three horses all round, and sharpened their shoes.

The proprietors of the Liverpool Mercury have distributed to their subscribers 60,000 copies of the portrait of the late Prince Consort.

A boy 12 years of age, son of Mr. George Hill, at Chelsea, was recently relieved of a tape worm forty feet in length. The boy had been suffering from it over two years.

Eliza Hoskins, a sister of Colonel Hoskins, of the Kentucky Union army has received a handsome silver tea-set from our soldiers, in token of her kindness as a nurse.

HARPER'S MONTHLY. We have received through the enterprising agents, the Messrs. Williams & Co., of Boston, the March number of this magazine. It grows in interest with every new issue.

The chapter, "How the Dutch are taking Holland," opens a new page in Dutch history, which will well repay the reader's attention.

"Turkey and Russia: or what shall be done with Turkey?" is a question upon which the European mind is unsettled; as the petty jealousies, of rival powers, who are ambitious to take the affairs of the people of that unhappy country under their guardianship, are mistrustful of each other, and are cautious about committing themselves on so grave a subject.

These are followed by other articles of sterling merit, which form a volume, for all classes of readers, unsurpassed in periodical literature. For sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

[BY REQUEST.]

BOSTON, OCT. 10th, 1861.

DEAR MADAM:—The address of Mr. Chambers is, I believe, simply Robert Chambers, Publisher, &c., Edinburgh, Scotland.

Mr. B. Coleman of London, also attended Miss Lord's sittings. His address is 48 Pembroke Villas, Bayswater.

Mr. T. J. Allman, 5 Camden Road, N., is one of the editors, I believe, of the London Spiritual Magazine. He could probably make you acquainted with Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Wm. Howitt, and other gentlemen interested in investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism. The editors of the Spiritual Magazine will remember my own letters and the Rev. Mr. Mountford's published communication in regard to the mediumship of Miss Lord, her trustworthiness, &c. She gave the manifestations twice at my own house (and very remarkable ones they were) under circumstances that precluded the possibility of deception or of trick. I also attended her circles some thirty times, and satisfied myself fully as to the genuineness of the phenomena of which she was the medium.

I should be pleased to learn that Miss Lord had been able to make arrangements to visit London. No thinking man can regard the wonderful physical phenomena that occur in her presence, with indifference or unconcern. Should this letter fall under the eye of any candid man of science, who will give to the subject the patience and humility it deserves, let me beg him to examine these phenomena under the conditions demanded, and if he will do it in the right spirit he will soon satisfy himself that modern science is blind and deaf to the most transcendent marvels that have addressed themselves to human experience.

Please give my regards to Miss Lord.—Should she visit Roxbury, I hope she will let me know of her presence. How far the war would interfere with the success of her circles this winter, I cannot say; but if she does not go to London I hope she will make a visit to Roxbury or Boston.

Respectfully yours,
EPES SARGENT.

Mrs. ANNIE LORD CHAMBERLIN,
Portland, Maine.

For the Patriot.

The Trumpet Sound.

BY F. M. ADELINGTON-WHEATMOUTH.

The trumpet sounds along our line,
 'Tis Freedom's cheering battle cry;
 Aloft she rears her holy sign—
 The stripes and stars of liberty.

The girth's ring leaders rally round,
 Press on the front and close the rear;
 And forward with the war horse bound,
 They rush to meet their foemen near.

Now breast to breast and steel to steel:
 The rebels' crimes will crush them down;
 Their guilty hearts be made to feel
 The terrors of their Country's frown.

The load will'ty roar, its base,
 The tenor infantry accord;
 The rifle's treble notes we trace,
 With flourish of the waving sword.

The dreadful anthem rends the sky,
 'Tis Freedom's high appeal to heav'n;
 Before our ranks the traitors fly,
 Like birds before the angels' drive.

And high above the battle cloud,
 Urging our patriot legions on,
 Are voices ringing clear and loud,
 Of Warren, Green, and Washington.

Our fathers' blood has found a voice:
 "One hour of glorious Liberty,"
 Shall ever be our children's choice,
 Before long years of slavery.

Treason shall wail her guilty deed,
 And call on rocks and caves to hide,
 While Freedom lifts her queenly head,
 Renown'd with justice by her side.

Said I to Myself, said I

BY CHARLES MACRAY.

I'm poor and quite unknown,
 I have neither fame nor rank,
 My labor is all my own,
 I have no gold at the bank;
 I'm one of the common crowd,
 Despised of the passers-by,
 Condemned by the rich and proud—
 Said I to myself, said I.

I want and cannot obtain,
 The luxuries of earth;
 My raiment is scant and plain,
 While others can laugh or sing,
 I have ever come to sigh;
 I am a weary wanderer—
 Said I to myself, said I.

But is this grieving just?
 Is it wise to fret and wail?
 Is it right, then speak of dust,
 Thine envy shall prevail?
 Is it fitting thou should'st close
 Thy right to the sunny sky,
 And on a dark suppel—
 Said I to myself, said I.

If poor, thou hast thy health;
 If humble, thou art strong;
 And the lack, that knows no wealth,
 Ever stings a happy song.
 The flowers rejoice in the air,
 And give their needs the lie;
 Thou art a fool, to foster care—
 Said I to myself, said I.

If the wants of thy pride be great,
 The needs of thy health are small;
 And the world is the man's estate,
 Who can wisely enjoy it all.
 For him the landscape spread,
 For him do the breezes ply,
 For him is the day-beam shed—
 Said I to myself, said I.

For him are the oceans rolled,
 For him do the rivers run,
 For him doth the year unfold,
 Her bounties to the sun;
 For him, if his heart be pure,
 Shall common things supply
 All pleasures that endure—
 Said I to myself, said I.

For him each blade of grass
 Waves pleasure as it grows;
 For him as the light clouds pass,
 A spirit of beauty flows;
 For him as the street-lights leap,
 Or the winds on the tree-tops sigh,
 Comes a music sweet and deep—
 Said I to myself, said I.

I will mould my life afresh,
 I will circumscribe desire;
 Farewell to ye, grief of flesh!
 And let my soul aspire.
 I will make my wants so few
 That my joy shall multiply;
 Adieu, false wants, adieu!
 Said I to myself, said I.

Anecdotes.

A poor Irish cripple sat begging at a bridge, when a young married couple went by. They didn't heed the beggar's petition, so just as they passed him, he exclaimed: "May the blessing of the Lord, which brings love and joy and wealth and a fine family, follow you all the days of your life—a pair of the couple passed her, and on the beggar, with a fine touch of caustic humor, added, and never overtake you!"

An old lady once complained to her doctor that she could scarcely breathe.

"Don't try, my good soul," replied the candid physician; "nobody wants you to do it."

The late Dr. Bell, at the battle of Bull Run, was examining a wounded rebel, who said to him:

"Doctor, you had better look to your own men; I suppose I am your enemy!"

The kind-hearted surgeon raised himself to his full height, and with that dignity inseparable from his character, replied:

"Sir, you were my enemy; you are my patient."

HYPOPHOSPHITES

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF
 Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Dyspepsia, Scrofula, Marasmus, Loss of Appetite, Neurasthenia, Female Complaints, and all Disorders of the Nervous and Blood Systems.

This Remedy has obtained a great reputation for curing the most ordinary and common STAGES OF CONSUMPTION. It is recommended by many thousand Physicians in the United States and Europe—having been used with RESULTS UNPARALLELED in the ANNALS OF MEDICINE.

The Hypophosphites have a two-fold and specific action on the one hand, increasing the principle which CONSTITUTES NERVOUS ENERGY, and on the other, being the most POWERFUL BLOOD GENERATING AGENTS KNOWN. In cases of Nervous Debility, or Prostration of the Vital Powers, from any cause, this Remedy has no superior.

"Winchester's Genuine Preparation?" Is the only reliable form of the Hypophosphites, made after the Original Formula of Dr. Churchill.

THE SPECIFIC PILL

 Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness, and Genital Irritability in either sex.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It is the very spring of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave. From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most aggravated cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excesses.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
 We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be. - B. Keith, M. D. [Ann. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired - Their effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think three boxes will complete the cure. - F. DICKER, M. D.

This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

HEBARD'S PATENT OIL!

more accidents by Burning Fluid!

safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps.

MHS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Oil, Spirit or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the great Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives steady, clean and soft light, and does not smoke the Lungs with soot and matters, such results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps from Snick and Snell by taking off the cap and chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Spirit or Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant Odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST ever offered to the public. It is a most valuable article, and what is more ALL it does is to burn.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.

State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing - Pat-tee.

Granted applied for and granted Feb. 24th, 60. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861. The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon. Wholesale 80 cents per gallon.

Orders solicited and filled with despatch. Letters promptly answered.

Our Baby.

Did you ever see our baby,
Little Tyne,
With her eyes so sparkling bright
And her skin so lily white Lips and cheeks of rosy light?
Tell us what;
She is just the sweetest baby
In the lot.
Ah! she is our only darling,
And to me—
And her little ways are witty;
When she sings her little ditty,
Every word is just as pretty
As can be—
Not another in the city
Sweet as she.
You don't think so—you never saw her!
Wish you could See her with her playthings clattering,
Hear her little tongue a chattering,
Little dancing feet come patter—Think you would Love her just as well as I do—
If you could!
Every grandma's only darling,
I suppose,
Is as sweet and bright a blossom,
Is a treasure to her bosom,
Is as cherishing and endearing
As my rose.
Heavenly Father, spare them to us,
Till life's close.

Scraps.

Gross and vulgar minds will always pay a higher respect for wealth than for talent; for wealth, though it be a far less efficient source of power than talent, happens to be more intelligible.

Penitence says discretion is the salt, and fancy the sugar of life; the one preserves, the other sweetens it.

To keep a good name. Be a good man, and above all never be a candidate for Governor or President.

Prayers are valuable only when they come from lips that have the courage to condemn.

Many a sweetly fashioned mouth has been disfigured and made hideous by the fiery serpent tongue within.

Men have hundreds of different languages; the winds, and trees, and birds, and waves speak but one over the whole earth.

A man may suffer without sinning; but a man cannot sin without suffering.

The test of enjoyment is the remembrance it leaves behind it.

A poet says the wind kisses the waves. That, we suppose, must be the celebrated "kiss for a blow," of which we have heard so much.

Money and time have both their value—He who makes a bad use of one will never make a good use of the other.

Out of. The words "out of," are the worst in the language when one is out of patience and out of money; when his wife tells him she is out of sugar one day; out of coffee the next, out of tea the next, out of flour the next, and finally out of spirits. The words are very good when one is out of debt, out of trouble, and out of jail. If a man has a smoky house and a scolding wife, out of doors is no bad place.

It has been remarked that ladies have generally a great fear of lightning, and this has been superficially ascribed to their natural timidity, but the truth is, that it arises from their consciousness of being attractive.

Most books in these days are like some kinds of trees—a great many leaves and no fruit.

Duty is the little blue sky over every heart and soul—over every life—large enough for a star to look between the clouds, and for sky-lark happiness to rise heavenward through and sing in.

Many persons spend so much time in criticizing and disputing about the gospel, that they have none left for practicing it. As if two men should quarrel about the phraseology of their physician's prescription, and forget to take the medicine.

What a burthen is leisure to a mind unprepared for its enjoyment!

Every art is best taught by example; good deeds are productive of good friends.

Miscellaneous.

As we Forgive our Debtors.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

Harry Green was a shrewd man of business; honest in all his dealings, yet ever exacting his own. He took no advantage of others, and was very careful not to let others take advantage of him. While acting on the precept, "Owe no man anything," he never lost sight of a debtor, nor rested while the obligation remained in force. A natural result was that Harry Green prospered in the things of this world—not that he became very rich, but so well off as to leave no reasonable want unsupplied.

It so happened, a few years ago, that a man named Wilkins, after an unsuccessful struggle with fortune, continued through six or seven years, failed in business. Few men had toiled harder, or suffered more; and when at last he yielded to the pressure of iron circumstances, he sunk down for a season prostrate in mind and body. Every thing that he had was given up to his creditors; the property paid but a small percentage on the claims—and then he went forth into the world, all his business relations broken up, and, under the heavy disadvantages of his situation, bravely sought to gain for his large dependent family, things needful to their sustenance and growth in mind and body.

Among his creditors was Green. Now Wilkins belonged to the same church that numbered Green among its members. When the latter heard of the failure, he was a good deal disturbed, though the sum owed him was not over four hundred dollars. On reflection he grew more composed.

Wilkins is an honest man, said he to himself. He'll pay me sooner or later.

It did not take long to sell off, at a sad sacrifice, the stock of goods remaining in the hands of the debtor, for he threw no impediment in the way of those who sought to obtain their due.

Ah, my friend, said the latter, on meeting with Green, a few days after the closing up of his insolvent estate, this is a sad business! But if God gives me strength, I will pay off every dollar of this debt before I die. An honest man can never sleep soundly while he owes his neighbor a farthing.

The right spirit, Wilkins, answered Green; the right spirit. Hold fast to that declaration, and all will come out straight in the end. Though I can't very well let out of my money, yet I will wait patiently until you are able to pay me. I always said you were an honest man; and I am sure you will make good my words.

God helping me, I will, said the debtor; his voice trembled, and his eye grew moist. O, how dark all looked in the future! What a cloud was on his path! What a weight of grief, mortification and despondency on his heart.

The two men parted, and each took his homeward way—the debtor and the creditor. The one with countenance erect, self-complacent feelings and elastic step, the other sad and depressed.

That night Mr. Green prayed. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Yet scarcely had the words died on his lips ere he was musing on the chances in favor of his ever receiving from the penniless Wilkins the few hundred dollars owed him by that unhappy individual. There was no sympathy for him in his heart; no thought of terrible prostration of spirit; nothing of pity and forgiveness. A selfish regard for his own interest completely absorbed all human considerations.

Time passed on. Mr. Wilkins was no drone. An earnest, active man, he soon found employment—not very remunerative at first, but still sufficiently so to enable him to secure many comforts for his family, and to provide for their education.

One, two, three years glided by. With the growth of his children, his expenses increased, and kept so close a tread upon his income that he had not been able to pay off any of the old obligations; although he never lost sight of them and never ceased to feel troubled on account of their existence.

O, debt, debt, debt! he would often sigh to himself. What would I not give to be able to say, I owe no man any thing. But with my large family and limited income, what hope is there.

This was his depressed state of mind one day when Mr. Green called in to see him. Many times before this unhappy man had been reminded of his debt.

How are you getting on? inquired the creditor, fixing his eyes steadily upon poor Mr. Wilkins, who felt a sense of suffocation and slightly quailed before his tyrant.

I have much to be thankful for, meekly answered the debtor. My health has been good, and I have had steady employment.

You are living very comfortably.

And we are grateful to a kind Providence for our blessings.

Your salary is one thousand dollars a year. It is; and I have six children to support. You ought to save something. I've been easy with you a long time; it's three years now, and you haven't offered me one cent. If you'd paid me five or ten dollars at a time, the debt would have lessened. I wish you would make some arrangement. You ought to save at least two hundred dollars from your salary. I know plenty of men who get only eight hundred a year, and have as large families as yours.

The eye of Mr. Wilkins fell heavily to the ground; he felt as if a heavy weight had been laid upon his bosom. He made no reply for what could he say.

I have always upheld you as an honest man, remarked Green, in a tone that implied an awakening doubt as to whether this view of the debtor's character was really correct.

That is between God and my own conscience, said Wilkins, lifting his eyes from the floor and looking with some sternness into the face of his persecuting creditor.

For your own sake, I trust you will keep a clear conscience, returned Green. As for the present matter between us, all I wish to know is, whether you mean to pay my debt; and if so, when may I expect to receive something?

How much is the debt? asked Wilkins.

It was three hundred and seventy dollars at the time of your failure. Interest added, it now amounts to four hundred and fifty, said Green.

There were other debts beside yours.

Of course there were; but I have nothing to do with them.

The whole amount of my indebtedness was twenty thousand dollars. The yearly interest on the whole debt is more than my whole income. I cannot pay even the interest, much less the principal.

But you can pay my small claim if you will; you could have paid it before this if the disposition had existed. You talk of conscience, but I'm afraid, brother Wilkins, in your case there is a very narrow foundation of honesty for conscience to rest upon.

I don't put much faith in the professions of men who live after the fashion you live, and yet refuse to pay their debts. I'm a plain spoken individual, and you have my mind freely.

The tone of the creditor was harsh in the extreme.

Perhaps, said Wilkins with forced calmness, there may be less dishonesty in my withholding than in your demanding.

Dishonesty! do you dare. The creditor's face flushed, and his lips quivered with indignation.

There are ten creditors in all, said Wilkins, with regained composure. Let me put to you a question. I owe John Martin six hundred dollars. Suppose I had six hundred dollars, and little prospect of getting any more, and were to pay the whole of it over to John Martin, instead of dividing it equally between you and all the creditors, would you deem the act right on my part? Or would you think Martin really honest to crowd and chafe me into very desperation, as it were, I gave him the whole of what mainly belonged to others? Would you not say he had possessed himself of your property? I know you would. And let me say to you plainly, that I do not think your present effort to get me to pay off your whole claim entire, regardless of others equally as much entitled to be paid as yourself, at all indicative of unselfishness, or a spirit of genuine honesty.

If I have any money to pay it belongs equally to my creditors—and not to one of them exclusively.

To be charged thus by a man who was in debt to him; to be charged with a dishonest spirit by the poor creature whose relation to society he regarded as essentially dishonest; was too much for the self complacency of Mr. Green. He rose up quickly, saying, in a threatening tone:

You will repent of this insult, sir! I have forbore for years, believing you to be really honest; but for this forbearance, I now meet with outrage. I shall forbear no longer. You are able enough to pay me, and I will find a way to compel you to do so.

Left alone with his troubled thoughts, poor Mr. Wilkins felt not only humiliated and wretched, but alarmed for the integrity of his household. There was no way in which his creditor could extort the sum due him except by seizing upon his household furniture. That Green would do this, he had but too good reason to fear; for he had done it in other cases. His fears proved not altogether groundless. On the very next day a sheriff's writ was served on him at the suit of Harvey Green.

What do you purpose doing? asked Wilkins, on meeting with his creditor a few days afterwards.

Get my money, was answered, somewhat sternly.

But I have nothing.

We will soon see about that! Good morning.

Mr. Green imagined that the indignation felt against Wilkins was directed against his dishonest spirit, was, in fact, a righteous indignation, when its spring was in cupidity and wounded pride.

It was the day before the trial of his case against Wilkins, when he expected to get judgment by default, as no answer had been made by the defendant in the case. And it was his purpose, as it had been from the beginning, to order an execution as soon as the matter was through the court and seize upon any property that could be found.

Evening came, and Mr. Green sat with his children around him, in his pleasant home.

A sweet little boy knelt before him, his pure hands clasped in prayer, while from his lips came musically, the words taught by the Lord to his disciples, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." There seemed a deeper meaning in the words, murmured by innocent childhood, than had ever before reached his perceptions. His thoughts were stirred; new emotions awakened. The prayer was said, the little one arose from his knees and lifted his rosy lips for a kiss.

Father, said he, turning back after going across the room, I'm not going to let Harry Williams pay me for that sled. It got broke the next day after I let him have it.

He bought it from you, said Mr. Green.

I know he did, but then Harry's mother is poor, and he only gets a penny now and then. It will take him a long, long time to get a dollar; and then the sled is broken and no good to him. I have a great many more nice things than he has, and why should I want his pennies when he gets so few?

What made you think of this? asked the father, who was touched by the words of his child.

It came into my mind just now as I was saying my prayer: I prayed, "Forgive our debts as we forgive our debtors!" Now Harry Williams is my debtor, is he not?

Yes, my son.

Well, if I don't forgive him his debt, how can I expect God to forgive me my debt? If I pray to him to forgive me as I forgive Harry, and I don't forgive Harry at all, don't I ask God not to forgive me his father?

The child spoke earnestly, and stood with his large, deep, calm eyes fixed intently on his father's face. Almost involuntarily Mr. Green repeated these words:

"If ye forgive not men their trespasses," said our Saviour, "neither will your father forgive your trespasses."

I'll forgive Harry the debt, father. I'm sure he isn't able to pay for the sled; and I have a great many more nice things than he has. If I don't do it how can I ever pray that prayer again?

O, yes, yes! Forgive him the debt by all means! replied the father, again kissing his boy.

That evening was spent by Mr. Green in closer self communion than he had known for many years. The words of his child had come to him like rebuking precepts from Heaven, and he bowed his head, humiliated and repentant, resolved to forgive as he would be forgiven.

On the morning that followed, as Mr. Wilkins, from whose mind the cloud had not lifted itself, who was yet trembling for the home of his children, was passing his door, a lad placed a letter in his hand. He knew the face of the boy from its likeness to that of Mr. Green.

More trouble, he sighed to himself as he thrust the letter into his pocket. An hour afterwards he opened it; and to his bewilderment and surprise, found within his account fully drawn out and receipted with the signature of Harvey Green. Below the receipt was written, "I stand rebuked. I must forgive if I hope to be forgiven."

It was with great difficulty that Wilkins could restrain a gush of tears, so great was his instant revulsion of feeling. Ah, if Harvey Green could have seen his heart at that moment, his debt would have been paid fourfold.

No amount of money poured into his coffers, could have produced such a feeling of heavenly delight.

Look at Home.

When once a home is regarded by the young as only a place to eat and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in a downward career. Young people must have a relaxation somewhere; if they do not find it at their own hearthstones they will be sought at other and less profitable places. Therefore at night make the homestead delightful with all those little arts that parents ought to understand. Don't repress the buoyant spirits of your children; half an hour of meriment round the firelight of a home, blots out the remembrance of many a care during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little inner sanctuary.

Letter from Co. B. Mass 13th.

Martinsburg, (Va.) Mar. 2d, 1862.

DEAR FATHER:—Now for a few minutes I will write you, thinking that you will be glad to hear how and where I am. Yesterday (Saturday) afternoon we started from Williamsport, accompanied by the Indiana 12th, two pieces of Matthew's Battery, and one company of cavalry. We crossed the river in a flat boat, one company at a time; at about half past six we were all on the Virginia side, and began our march. We reached Martinsburg at 2 o'clock, this morning.

We found the rebels had deserted the town, most of them with their families; many of the union families have been driven from this place some time ago, so the town was pretty quiet when we arrived.

Martinsburg is about thirteen miles from Williamsport, where we have been for the last four months. In taking a stroll around town with a friend of mine, (John Elmes,) I saw at the railroad depot thirty-eight steam engines, all spoiled, burned, rusted and battered to pieces. They were, I guess, a fine lot of machines—large and handsome—but now they are good for nothing; the rebels have spoiled them, and also a splendid bridge. The American flag is waving from the court house, and from head quarters. All is now still—the soldiers are strolling about the town for curiosity's sake. To-morrow there are five regiments more coming here; also, four pieces of artillery and some cavalry.

Gen. Banks I suppose is near here. We shall move towards Winchester, probably, in a few days, and then we shall have a battle which I think will decide the day in Western Virginia. We are all in good spirits, awaiting for further orders. We have nice, comfortable quarters; our Company (B) is in a private house, some of the companies are in churches, others in halls, &c.

Our wagon train has just arrived. Our march here was quite easy, and but little of interest transpired on the way. When about four miles from Martinsburg the advance guard came upon some cavalry pickets, who left so quickly that we could not see their heels for dust. We fired a few shots after them in token of our regards, and as a parting good night. We arrived here soon after, and finding our quarters, I laid down in my blankets and was soon asleep.

This morning it is snowing hard, which will make the marching bad, but let the orders come when they will, we are ready to carry them out. It we stop here a few days, as soon as we get a little settled, I will write again, and give you more minute particulars of the place—until then, good-bye.

From your son,

WARREN B. STETSON.

Moral and Social Reform.

Moral and Social Reform! What? two such words in one sentence? Who can tell their meaning? Who? Where shall we go to realize the extent of Moral and Social Reform? Who claims to be a Reformer? Who a Socialist? How often we hear the exclamation, what a cold, selfish and thoughtless people we daily meet with. Now is it really so? and if so, why is it thus? Tell us, ye who can.

Shall we go to yonder sanctuary, where people are wont to assemble time after time, to hear and receive that divine wisdom, and holy love, which we are told cometh from above—the great fountain head—the Father—the Divine—the Holy One; shall we go there for reform and social brotherly love? Have we not for ages past listened to their teachings? and have they taught us how to love our brother man? and if perchance they are unfortunate, and to us, seemingly fallen, how to raise them up, and extend the hand of sympathy and kindness? Or shall we go amongst the smaller number of brethren, who have seen fit to come out from among them, and receive holy teachings in a more humble and retiring manner; whose aim is progression, and whose march is ever onward, and where week after week they assemble to aid the work of progress and reform? Is it there where they are taught that the great secret of all happiness, is the love and sweet communion of mind with mind, and heart with heart? Is it there where humanity is taught that man is our brother, and God our Father, and all contribute to the one great whole? Is it there they teach morality and social love? Tell us ye who love these holy teachings. What is moral and social reform? Is a party calling themselves reformers to assemble together for social amusement—or, in the merry dance to receive strangers in their midst, treating them not only with coldness and contempt, but adding insult to injury, wounding all the finer feelings of their nature—causing many a noble soul to turn away with feelings of sadness and remorse?

Is this reform? Is this social, brotherly love? If so, may its progress be stayed. Ought not reformers to be charitable in acts, as well as words? Is it well to "cast out a mote," (if perchance there might be one) "from a brother's eye, while a beam is in their own eye?" Is it well to preach love, and practise hate? If so, what is reform, and what social love? Tell us ye progressive ones.

For the Patriot.

Letter from San Francisco, Cal.

JAN 7th, 1862.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

I do not want my friends to forget me; and a little messenger from Quincy the other day, reminded me anew of my promise to write occasionally for the "Patriot," though what I write will probably have no interest to indifferent eyes.

Those who cared for me will be glad to know of my safe arrival in this far-famed land—the goal to which so many ambitions tend; and, alas, the burial place of many a bright hope. I think there are few finer prospects than I behold from my window every fine morning. The house stands on an eminence overlooking the city, which is teeming with active, busy life. The beautiful bay, which Bayard Taylor describes as one of the finest in the world, is in full view, with its white sails glistening in the sun. The hills, green and beautiful as our own in mid summer—all combine to make this winter prospect a fine one.

It is now the rainy season; everything is cold, damp, and disagreeable; and the few lovely days interspersed are a foretaste of the long bright months of entirely dry weather—but I shall miss the green grass, the beautiful shade trees, so common at home, so very rare in this city. I must confess to a pretty strong feeling of disappointment, and perhaps a little homesickness, though I had no very definite idea of California.

I would say to those who are comfortably well off at home, to stay there; but young men and those who have no settled home, cannot, perhaps, do better anywhere than here; rents are higher, but, aside from that, the difference in the cost of living is but trifling. Labor brings a good price; girls who work out have twenty-five dollars per month; laboring men have three and four dollars per day. Masons' and carpenters' work promises to be good for the ensuing summer. Perhaps these hints may be of use to some.

The journey, to those who have plenty of money, is not a hard one. We were only twenty-three days from New York to San Francisco, and I cannot realize that I have been ferried over two mighty oceans, that their waters roll between my home and me, that strangers sit in the old familiar places. O! these years, how they are marked by Time's desolating changes. Thank God for a faith that looks exultingly beyond the wreck of Time; and fixes its hopes on the "sure basis of Eternity."

Wednesday Eve, Jan. 8th.—The rain has been falling in torrents for the last three days, enough to make one homesick and miserable. People are out in all directions digging drains in the sand to prevent being flooded. How I wish I was in old Massachusetts to-night; I'd stay there—till the rainy season was over.

New Year's day was a gala day here; everybody seemed to be enjoying it. Yet how many voices that wished us "Happy New Year" one year ago, are silent now. How many little children look in vain for the "dear papa," whose New Year's blessing will never rest on them again. Little feet will grow weary; little eyes grow dim with watching; and tearful faces be pressed against the window pane in vain. Happy ones, enjoy your dear friends while you have them; be kind to them, for death may enter your happy homes and rob you of your treasures.

they, as has often been said, the last at his cross and the first at his sepulchre, but throughout they ministered to his wants. A woman anointed him for his burial; a healthy woman interceded for his life with her husband, Pilate; women bewailed and lamented him as he went to Calvary; to a woman he first appeared when he rose again. All this was most fitting, since of a woman he was born, and to woman his Gospel was not only a means of salvation, but a source of domestic and social elevation for the present life.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, March 15th, 1862.

TO READERS. A very interesting communication from San Francisco, (Cal.) will be found in to-day's paper. It is from an old and esteemed correspondent, who resided a few months since in this place. The poetry we published last week, from her sister, was thankfully received. There are other communications, both instructive and pleasing, which our readers should not fail to peruse.

SLIGHT ACCIDENT. Mr. John W. Hall having harnessed a spirited horse into an open wagon, standing in the rear of Mr. Dutton's store, on Thursday evening last, stepped upon the hind of the buffalo robe, when the animal started off at a rapid rate. Mr. Hall not having the reins, tried his vocal organs, but they had no effect in stopping the infuriated beast, so he sought safety by jumping from the carriage. He struck rather heavily upon the ground which was partly covered with ice, but escaped with a few slight bruises and scratches—and looked the next morning as if he had quite a set-to with some of his companions. Neither the horse or wagon received any damage.

THE SOLDIERS' FUND. At a meeting of the subscribers of the Soldiers' Fund, held on Wednesday evening last, Capt. Lewis Biss was chosen Moderator, and Noah Cummings, Esq. Secretary. The Committee made the following report, which was accepted:—

Amount received from donors, $2,344 00
Amount of bills paid, 1,326 13

Amount on hand, $1,017 87

Voted, To choose three Trustees to invest the fund now remaining.

Chose, Daniel Baxter, Ebenezer Adams, and Noah Cummings; and they were instructed to spend no more than the interest of the remaining Fund except by the consent of the Committee.

SCHOOL DISTRICT MEETING. A meeting of the inhabitants of the Willard School District qualified to vote in town affairs, was held on Wednesday evening, the 12th inst.

The meeting was called to order by the Clerk, who received ballots for Moderator.

The whole number of votes for Moderator was thirty-six; Frederick A. Trask had thirty-six and was chosen.

The whole number of votes for Clerk was fifty-five; Samuel Ames had fifty-four and was chosen.

Whole number of votes for Prudential Committee was seventy-one; William Chesley had sixty-eight and was chosen.

Voted, To accept the report of the Prudential Committee of last year.

Voted, That future District meetings be called as heretofore provided.

Voted, That this meeting be dissolved.

A SAD ACCIDENT. On Tuesday evening, March 4, as the workmen at the Ropewalk, in Hingham, were closing the labors of the day, a lad, 16 years old, named John Hickey, lost his right arm. He was sweeping up, as usual, a few minutes before the Walk was to be closed for the night. One piece of machinery, furnished with long steel teeth, and rapidly revolving, was still in motion. Reaching under this to gather up some fragments of waste, the teeth of the wheel or cylinder caught in the sleeve of his garment, and in an instant the arm was shivered to atoms and twisted off at the elbow. The agony of that moment must have been awful, as the blood gushed from his mouth and nose and ears. Drs. Harlow and Stephenson were immediately sent for, and the lad conveyed to the house of his father. This accident is the more deplorable, as it was the right arm, so that even if he survives, his loss for life will be very grievous.

APPOINTMENT. James E. Tirrell, Esq., of this town, has been re-appointed, by the Governor and Council, a Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Norfolk.

ELECTION. At the State election in New Hampshire on Tuesday last, Gov. Berry, the Republican candidate, was re-elected by a small majority. The Republican majority in the House will be from 50 to 75.

EDUCATIONAL. The cost of the Boston schools last year was over six hundred thousand dollars. The salaries of the teachers amounted to $286,000.

WEYMOUTH ELECTION. At the annual March Meeting held in Weymouth on Monday last, the 10th inst., B. F. White, Moderator, the following named gentlemen were elected officers, for the ensuing year: Town Clerk—Francis Ambler.

Town Treasurer—Gilman Burrell.

Selectmen—James Humphrey, Noah Vining, Z. L. Bicknell.

Assessors—Isaac N. Hollis, Wm. W. Raymond, Elbridge G. Hunt.

Overseers of Poor—James Tirrell, Samuel Curtis, Lemuel Torrey.

Highway Surveyors—Jason Holbrook, Jacob French, S. W. Guttererson, Nathaniel Ford, Josiah Copeland, Franklin Whitten, Q. L. Reed, Loring Tirrell, Stephen Cain, Gilbert Bates, Wm. Stoddard.

School Committee to fill vacancy for Third District—G. W. Fay.

School Committee for Three Years—Elmer Hewitt, 5th District, B. T. White, 5th District, Levi A. Abbott, 9th District, William White, 2d District.

THE NANTASKET. Government has chartered this fine steamer for the period of thirty days or longer, at $350 per day, and government furnishes pilot and coal. The company have employed Capt. A. L. Ronell to command her, and he will have on board about twelve men in all. Capt. Ronell, her pilot, it is believed, is to be one of her company. She is to be used, it is presumed, as a transport, and will probably convey passengers and commissary stores mainly. Her destination is not known even to her captain. We wish her all success and a safe return of the boat, her excellent commander and all on board.—Hingham Journal.

THE PRESIDENT'S EMANCIPATION MESSAGE. The National Intelligencer states that the President, in the policy he recommends, has received earnest and numerous assurances of support from that class of persons in the border slaveholding States who are most immediately interested in the proposition brought to the notice of Congress. Many of the most influential slaveholders in Maryland and Delaware have urged the project upon Mr. Lincoln.

WHAT DIPLOMATISTS THINK OF THE REBELLION. We have it from good authority that Mr. Hulseman, the Minister from Austria to this country, has stated that every one of the foreign representatives at Washington had come to the conclusion that the days of the rebellion are numbered, and that the power of the Federal Government would be soon fully re-established in all the seceded States; and, moreover, that the Foreign Ministers had sent dispatches to their respective governments to this effect. In a few weeks we shall, therefore, probably see a great change in the tone of the foreign official journals in regard to our present war.—N. Y. Etc. Post.

ECLIPSES FOR THE YEAR 1862. There will be five eclipses this year, as follows:

1. A total eclipse of the moon just before midnight of June 11. Total eclipse begins one hour and seven minutes after beginning, and lasts one hour and three minutes. Total duration, three hours seventeen minutes.
2. A partial eclipse of the sun, June 27, in the morning. Invisible in America, but visible in the Indian Ocean.
3. A partial eclipse of the sun, Nov. 21. Invisible in America, but seen in the great Southern Ocean.
4. A partial eclipse of the sun, Dec. 20. Invisible in America, but visible in Asia generally.
5. A total eclipse of the moon, early in the morning of Dec. 6, visible. The eclipse becomes total one hour nine minutes after beginning, and lasts one hour thirty-two minutes. Total duration, three hours forty-nine minutes.

NOBLE CONDUCT. In the year 1856, says the Salem Register, of a late date, a business man of this city failed and compounded with his creditors by paying them fifty cents on a dollar, receiving a full and free discharge. Since then he has prospered and is now engaged in paying the remaining fifty cents to the uttermost farthing, with interest from the time of his discharge. This unsolicited and unexpected payment bespeaks an honest and honorable debtor, and is worth mentioning, as a notable example in these hard times.

CARPETS. "The Carpet trade in our city is turned topsy-turvy by large invoices having been brought over from New York by the New England Carpet Company, from the great auction sale of Hadden & Co. of the 26th ult. They are cutting these carpets up to their retail trade at an unprecedented and astonishing rate."—Boston Post.

The firm referred to above have an advertisement in our issue of to-day, to which we would direct the attention of purchasers of carpeting.

OUR NAVY. The damage done by the Merrimac is estimated at about $3,000,000—to say nothing of the melancholy loss of life.

Free Chowder at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

WINTER still lingers with us. There was a light fall of snow yesterday; not enough, however, to repair the damages done to the sleighing by the late thaw; that amusement we think, must be laid over until another season.

ANOTHER CHURCH DESTROYED BY FIRE in Foxboro. The Catholic Church in Foxboro was totally destroyed by fire, recently.

The church was a frame building, with a brick basement, and seated from four to five hundred people. The alarm was given at a quarter past twelve, p. m., and at three the building was a heap of ruins. Although the building was partially insured, the loss is very heavy, as the altar and decorations, paintings, robes and furniture were not insured.

DEATH OF GENERAL LANDER. Gen. Lander died at Pau Pau, Western Virginia, March 2, from the debilitating effects of his wound received at Edwards' Ferry. Gen. Shields succeeds Gen. Lander in command.

DEBT AND EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT. President Lincoln states that already $500,000,000 have been spent in prosecuting the war. Its expenses are about $2,000,000 per day.

RAVAGES OF THE DIPHTHERIA. The Aroostook (Me.) Pioneer, says Mr. Butterfield, of the firm of S. P. Bradbury & Co., marble workers, Bangor, has lately visited Patten and vicinity, and received orders from over forty families for grave stones to be placed over their beloved dead. It is a tale which he relates of his call on these families. Three have lost all their children; one has lost five, and twelve have lost three each, and about half of the forty families have lost two each—over one hundred in all. One in eleven of the whole population has died, mostly children and youths.

Poetry.

March

BY BATADE TAYLOR.

With rushing winds and gloomy skies
The dark and stubborn winter dies;
Far off, unseen, Spring faintly cries,
Hiding her earliest child arise.

By streams still held in icy snare,
On Southern hillsides, melting bare,
O'er fields that moulder colors war,
That summons life the cheerful air.

What though conflicting seasons make Thy days of field, they woo or shake
The sleeping life of life awake,
And Hope is stronger for thy sake.

Then from thy mountains, ribbed with snow,
Once more thy rousing bugle blow,
And East and West, and to and fro,
Proclaim thy coming to the foe.

Say to the plover, chilled and numb,
Say to the Camp's impatient hum,
Say to the trumpet and the drum,
Lift up your hearts, I come, I come!

Cry to the waiting birds that stray
On sandy sea-shores far away,
By marshy field and gleaming bay,
Where Southern March is Northern May.

Announce thyself with welcome noise,
Where Glory's victor eagles poise
Above the proud, heroic boys
Of Iowa and Illinois.

Then down the long Potomac's line
Shout like a storm on hills of pine,
Till ransomed ring and bayonet shine—
"Advance! the Chief's call is mine."

Patience

Dear the same calm lesson given—
You tell me I must patient be;
How long does patience last, and how Can it be learned by me?

Dear mother, must I wait and hope,
Through all the tedious days of spring,
To see my tiny birds hatched,
And taught to chirp and sing?

While each green tree is full of life,
And each bird and lark the air fill
With music; o'er my silent nest Must I be patient still?

The seeds I sowed so long ago
Still in the earth's green bosom rest,
While everywhere, o'er dale and hill,
Blooms again the crocus white.

The leg it cups of carven gold,
And laden buds fly late in eve
From blossoms manifold.
But in my garden's tiny space
No spring like blossoms can I see;
Dear mother, 'tis a weary task—
Why must I patient be?

Ab, dearest child, a time must come
To thee and all, or soon or late,
When all these childish griefs and joys
Will seem of father's weight.

Yet childish griefs may prove as deep,
Though momentary, as manhood's woes;
Still are its tear-drops dried as soon
As dew upon the rose.

Dear one, thy lingering seeds will grow,
Though leafless now, to bud and bloom,
If not to blush in summer's wealth,
At least to crown her tomb.

Thy tardy birds from brighter skies
Their sweetest notes shall then have caught,
When all these childish griefs and joys
The truth to thee has taught.

Then shalt thou know the purpose high
For which thy tribulation came:
When patience, through experience, grows
To hope without a shame.

The heart that throbs with anxious cares
O'er flower and bird, withheld so long,
Shall one day see its hopes fulfilled
In endless bloom and song.

Anecdotes.

At the late levee at the White House, the President asked the Russian Ambassador whether he would have taken him for an American if he had met him anywhere else then in this country.

No, said the distinguished Muscovite, who like Old Abe is a bit of a wag, I should have taken you for a Pole.

So I am, exclaimed the President, straightening himself up to his full attitude, and a Liberty Pole, at that.

A juror's name was called by the clerk. The man advanced to the desk and said he would like to be excused.

It is impossible, said the judge, decidedly. But, judge, if you knew my reasons, I'm quite sure—

Well, sir, proceed, continued the judge; what do you allege?

Well, judge, if I must say it—I've got the tick!

The judge exclaimed: Clerk, scratch that man out.

Not long since, a lady dwelling in New York asked her seven-year-old George where he had been.

Out visiting!

Did you leave your card?

No; I hadn't any, so I left a marble!

A clergyman consulting a young widow on the death of her husband, remarked that she could not find his equal.

PURE LIQUORS
FOR PRIVATE USE AND MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers, a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say that our experience of more than FORTY years as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and that every article sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue of goods, prices, &c.

HYPHOSPHITES
FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Dyspepsia, Scrophula, Marasmus, Loss of Appetite, Neuralgia, Female Complaints, and all Disorders of the Nervous and Blood Systems.

This Remedy has obtained a great reputation for most EXTRAORDINARY CURES in ALL STAGES OF CONSUMPTION. It is recommended by many of the most eminent Physicians in the United States, and Europe, and has been used with RESULTS UNPARALLELED in the ANNALS of MEDICINE.

The Hyphosphites have a two fold and specific action on the one hand, increasing the principle which CONSTITUTES NERVOUS ENERGY, and on the other, being the most POWERFUL BLOOD GENERATING AGENTS KNOWN. In cases of Nervous Debility, or Prostration of the Vital Powers, from any cause, this Remedy has no superior.

"Winchester's Genuine Preparation" Is the only reliable form of the Hyphosphites. Made after the Original Formula of Dr. Churchill.

THE SPECIFIC PILL
A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR Spermatorrhoea, or Seminal Weakness, and Genital Irritability in either sex.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It saps the very springs of life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and stinks the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excesses.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhoea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—E. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired— Their effect has been Truly Wonderful! I used them in a case of Spermatorrhoea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think three boxes will complete the cure—E. P. DICKE, M. D.

This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

HEBARD'S
PATENT OIL!
No more accidents by Burning Fluid!

A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps. THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Sperm or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Sulfur by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm and Lamp Oil, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke, or unpleasant Odor, and is now considered the safest and best Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than ALL it is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired.

VINGS. Price only TWENTY FIVE

cents. Sent free of postage to all parts of the U. S. On the infirmities of youth and manhood, disclosing the secret follies of both of all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal inclinations, involuntary emissions, lunacy, defective memory, indigestion, lassitude, with confessions of thrilling and of a Boarding School Miss, a College and a Young Married Lady, &c., &c.

A faithful adviser to the married and single, contemplating marriage, who entertain doubts of their physical condition, and are conscious of having hazarded the happiness and privileges to which human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with disorders, generally caused by a bad habit

of the system, the effects of which are dizziness, weakness, sometimes a ringing in ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of

memory, with melancholy, may be cured by

author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON

TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our

space to VISITING THE EUROPEAN

HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the advantage and resources of the most skilled

physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of

many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS

METHODS which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may be assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SE-

RIETY and attention being paid to their

cases, which has so successfully distinguished

heretofore, as a Physician in our PECU-

LIAR department of professional Practice,

the last twenty-five years.

THE FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish

Medicines, the efficacy of which has been proved in thousands of cases, and never failed

to effect speedy cures without any bad results

use none but Dr. DeLancy's Female Pellids Pills. The only precaution necessary is to observe it, ladies should not take them

they have reason to believe they are in their situations (the particular of which is found on the wrapper accompanying

the box), though always safe and healthy,

gentle, and so active are they.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of the interesting complaints to which their

delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

THE "MILK AND GALACTIC" PROTECTIVE.

This "MILK AND GALACTIC" PROTECTIVE

is a medicine for women who have not added, or who have no desire to increase their milks, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and

has been extensively used during the last 20

years. Price reduced to $10.

THE SECRETS OF YOUTH UNVEILED

Better Late than Never.

Life is a race where some succeed,

While others are beginning;

'Tis luck at times, at others speed,

That gives an early winning.

But if you chance to fall behind,

Never slacken your endeavor,

But keep this wholesome truth in mind,

'Tis better late than never.

If you can keep ahead 'tis well,

But never trip your neighbor;

'Tis noble when you can excel

By honest, patient labor;

But if you are outstripped at last,

Press on as bold as ever;

Remember, though you are surpassed,

'Tis better late than never.

Never labor for an idle boast,

Or victory o'er another;

But while you strive your utmost,

Deal fairly with a brother.

Wait for your station, do your best,

And hold your purpose ever;

And if you fail to reach the rest,

'Tis better late than never.

Choose well the path in which you run,

Succeed by noble daring;

Then, though the last, when once 'tis won,

Your crown is worth the wearing.

Then never fret if left behind,

Nor slacken your endeavor,

But ever keep this truth in mind—

'Tis better late than never.

Scraps.

A resident of Cleveland, Ohio, having advertised in the local papers for a girl, the next morning found a female baby at his door,

with this note pinned to its dress: "Mr. —
You advertised in this week's — that you wanted a young girl. I hope the article I sent you will meet your requirements. I could have sent her to you still younger if your advertisement had appeared before, but as she is only a week old, I hope her age will be no objection. I have no younger one at present."

"You flatter me," said a thin exquisite,

other day, to a young lady, who was praising

the beauty of his mustache. "For Heaven's sake, my dear," interposed an old skipper,

"don't make that monkey any flatter than he is now."

Age should make us gentle; let not the heart grow black as the head grows white.

A young farmer asked an old Scotchman for advice in his pursuit. He told him what had been the secret of his own success in farming, and concluded with the following warning: "Never, Sandie, never—above all things, NEVER get in debt, but if you do, let it be for manure!"

"Don't cry, little boy. Did he hit you on purpose?" "No sir; he hit me on the head."

A person should not be expected to take off his glove preparatory to shaking hands with another, any more than to take off his boot when about to kick a man.

"A fine old Irish gentleman" at Lynn, who did not own a flag, wishing to celebrate the Federal victories, hung out a blue shirt and a white one, together "and the old woman's red petticoat," saying: "Be jabers! I'd have the blunders out, any how."

He is always a rich man who has God for his friend.

Take the hand of the friendless, smile on the sad and dejected, sympathize with those in trouble; strive everywhere to diffuse around you sunshine and joy. If you do this you will be sure to be beloved.

A melancholy, but robust bachelor in Waldo, Oregon, has sent his photograph and a letter to the New Bedford ladies, and requests them to communicate with him on the subject of matrimony. He says: "I am 29 years old, I am six feet one inch high and weigh

200. I am well able to take care of a wife."

Woman—The morning star of our youth;

the day star of our manhood; the evening star of our age. Heaven bless our stars!

A pair of stockings sent by the ladies' committee for the use of some gallant volunteer,

was accompanied by the following verse:

Brave sentry, on your lonely beat,

May these blue stockings warm your feet;

And when from war and camps you part,

May some fair knitter warm your heart.

A Western New York farmer writes as follows to a distinguished scientific agriculturist, to whom he felt under obligations for introducing a variety of swine: "Respected

Sir—I went yesterday to the fair at M—.

I found several pigs of your species; there was a great variety of breeds, and I was astonished at not seeing you there!"

I'll take the responsibility, as Jenks said

when he held out his arms for the baby.

Miscellaneous.

A Thrilling Sketch.

The light of an October sun fell in slanting rays of gold upon our fair gem of the mountain—the Winnepesaukee. The waves crippled and curled in the soft breeze, and fanned the green islands in ruffles of silver.

It was a glorious scene—that wide, glittering lake—that clear, cloudless sky, and that eternal wall of mountains, keeping a silent watch over all! Perhaps some such thoughts flitted through the mind of farmer

Horton's good wife as she sat leisurely darning

her husband

THE QUINCY HORSE RAILROAD. The prospect now is, that by the month of May, this road will be open for travel. Operations have already commenced; the bridge at Neponset is to be so altered as to admit of a passage across it, and the small unfinished piece of road on the Dorchester side is to be hurried through as soon as the weather will permit.

THE CITY OF NASHVILLE. It is not at all strange that the people of Tennessee and citizens of Nashville were anxious to preserve their beautiful capital and city from the effects of a bombardment. There is no city in the South which has more beautiful and costly buildings, public or private.

Among its magnificent structures are: the new Capitol, with a tower two hundred and six feet high, costing over a million of dollars; the State Penitentiary, universities, colleges, cathedral, and churches—medical colleges, military institute, orphan asylums, asylum for the blind, the most valuable mineralogical cabinet in the country, Methodist book house, &c., &c.; a railroad bridge of wood over the Cumberland, with an immense draw bridge of two hundred and eighty feet, and two stationary spans each two hundred feet, costing $250,000; a wire suspension bridge of more than seven hundred feet span, one hundred and ten feet above the water, and costing $100,000; water works costing nearly $1,000,000; gas works, &c. Population twenty thousand.

LEGISLATIVE. Numerous remonstrances have been presented the past week, from towns in Norfolk and Plymouth Counties against freeing the Hingham and Quincy Bridges. Below is one from the Corporation:

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled:

"The Remonstrance of the Hingham and Quincy Bridge and Turnpike Corporation humbly shews, that there is now before the honorable Senate a bill by which the State proposes to take possession of their property on the first day of April next, and requires them to commence proceedings thereafter in order to obtain any payment."

"When a similar petition was presented two years since, the legislative committee reported a bill providing for the assent of the Corporation before it should become a law, assuming that the committee of the present legislature would see that our rights were as properly guarded, we did not re-memorate; but now that they have reported a bill so such at variance with the established policy of the Commonwealth, we respectfully protest against the passage of the same—"

"Because the petitioners have failed to satisfy the honorable Commissioners of Plymouth County and of Norfolk County (the legal tribunals) that there is any exigency requiring the appropriation of our franchise and property to public uses, and their appeal to the legislature from such decisions for special enactments would, if granted, be depriving the local boards of the authority conferred on them by general law and by the Act of the preceding legislature."

"Because the rights which said Corporation has under the charter granted by the Commonwealth would by such legislation be invaded and impaired, as such rights are not sufficiently protected in the proposed Act."

"And because the Corporation (now represented mostly by descendants of the original projectors) relying upon the good faith of the Commonwealth and the charter granted them in 1807, took the risk of an enterprise which did not promise immediate return, and from which no income was received for a very long time, deem that their property, now just becoming of value, should be fully protected, and is required by the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States

By their Treasurer,
JEFFERY B. BRACKETT,
Quincy, March 12, 1862.

It appeared in evidence before the Committee, that beside the proposition of the first purchase which Quincy must pay, the yearly expenses for repairs, draw tenders, etc., falling upon her would be about two hundred dollars.

Rev. Charles A. Skinner, of Cambridgeport, will preach in the Universalist Church to-morrow.

PETROLEUM OIL. The supply of Petroleum oil in Pennsylvania is believed to be inexhaustible. The weekly product is now twenty-five thousand barrels, and there is no well where twenty might not be sunk. The present wells might be made to yield two hundred thousand barrels a week.

A WRECK. The Belchertown house was crushed in recently, by the weight of snow on the roof; it was converted into a total wreck. The building was erected in 1845 at a cost of $2100.

HEROIC. The quality of pluck was very decidedly exhibited last week by a woman in Manchester, (N. H.) who had twenty-one teeth extracted at one sitting, and without the use of ether or chloroform.

AN OLD COIN. A small copper coin, which was dug up at Hingham, Massachusetts, some time since, was incubated upon at the last meeting of the Boston Numismatic Society. It is much worn, and a distinguished antiquary of that vicinity has been endeavoring to find in it a trace of the "Northmen." The verdict of the Society was that the coin was a Spanish one of the late 1659, and the "Runic" characters on either side were dissolved into modern monograms.

LUNCH. Savil, at his pleasant room, Johnson's building, will entertain his friends this evening with a social "Lunch," etc., etc.

The Aquarial Gardens in Boston are to be stocked with fish from tropical waters, and the zoological department is to be immediately enriched by foreign importation.

Experiments in the casting of bronze guns are in progress at the Rogers Locomotive Works in Patterson, New Jersey.

A physician of Cincinnati, who had lost his morning's milk from the front area, recently put an enema in the pitcher, and the next morning discovered a policeman a little distance from his house "making his return."

Philadelphia has the largest fire department in the world. It consists of 190 companies, 27 steam engines, 40 hand engines, 10 hose carriages, with four wheels and ten with two wheels. The estimated value of the property is over $1,000,000. The number of fires in that city during the past year was 382; estimated loss $343,290; insured $205,265.

Not a single Massachusetts soldier has been killed or wounded since General Banks commenced his advance upon Virginia three weeks ago.

The Louisville Democrat states that during the occupancy of Bowling Green by the rebels, between forty-seven and forty-eight hundred graves were made there.

Hon. Alfred Ely having received about fifty letters from out-laws residing in New York, appeared before the Committee of Ways and Means recently, in opposition to the proposed tax of ten cents on every barrel of flour. The result was that this tax was stricken from the bill.

My Country's Flag of Stars.

BY A FORETOMAN.

I've roamed for many a mile
Upon the stormy seas;
I've seen full twenty banners float
All proudly on the breeze—
That standard, too, Great Britain's pride,
The boast of England's lore—
Yet none could thrill my heart but thee,
My Country's Flag of Stars!

Brazil's gay flag of gorgeous dyes;
The banner of old Spain;
Even Gallia's hunting, as it flies,
Is not undimmed by stains;
Their lustre has been sullied oft;
At home, by deadly jars;
But thy bright azure fields are pure;
My Country's Flag of Stars!

In some far'd foreign ports I've seen
The flags of half the world—
To celebrate a gala day—
Their hunting, as it flies,
With thrilling heart I glanced my eye
Along the tapering spars,
Until my gaze was fixed on thee,
My Country's Flag of Stars!

And when thy stripes and azure field
First met my eager sight,
My bosom heaved, my heart it thrilled,
With feeling of delight.
I hailed it as the ensign
Of our Columbia's tars
The banner of the brave and free,
My Country's Flag of Stars!

And where's the heart possessing but
One spark of Freedom's zeal,
That would not, gazing at thy folds,
A patriot's spirit feel?
The veteran, too, as he looks down
Upon his ancient scars,
That would not hush his lips with delight,
My Country's Flag of Stars!

I Must Hasten Home.

I must hasten home, said a rosy child,
Who had gaily roamed for hours;
I must hasten home to my mother dear—
She will seek me in the bowers;
If she chides, I will seal her lips with a kiss
And offer her all my flowers.

I must hasten home, said a beggar girl,
As day began to dawn;
And the gliding jewels her dark hair deck'd,
Shone bright as the dew on a lawn;
I'll forsake the joys of this changing world
Which leave in the heart but a thorn.

I must hasten home, said a dying youth,
Who had vainly sought for fame;
Who had vowed to win a laurel wreath,
And immortalize his name;
But a stranger he died on a foreign shore—
All the hopes he had cherished were vain.

I must hasten home, said an aged man,
As he gazed on the grassy sod,
Where oft, ere age had silvered his hairs,
The feet had lightly trod;
Farewell! farewell to the lovely earth—
I am hastening home to God!

True Loveliness.

She who thinks a noble heart
Better than a noble mien—
Honors virtue more than art,
Though 'tis less in fashion seen—Whate'er her fortune be,
She's the bride—the wife—for me!

She who deems that inward grace
Far surpasses outward show,
She who values less the face
Than that charm the soul can throw,
Whate'er her fortune be,
She's the bride—the wife—for me!

She who knows the heart requires Something more than lips of dew—
That when Love's brief rose expires,
Love itself dies with it too—
Whate'er her fortune be,
She's the bride—the wife—for me!

Anecdotes.

A jolly fellow had an office next to a doctor's. One day an elderly gentleman of the old fogy school blundered into the wrong shop.

Doctor X in?
Don't live here, says P., who was in full scribble over some important papers, without losing up.

Oh! thought this was his office.
Next door.
Pray, sir, can you tell me has the doctor many patients?

Not living.

Believe in ghosts? of course I do, said the widow Trough; my poor husband appeared to me, just as plain—

Did you see him? her hearers asked in open-mouthed astonishment.

No, I didn't see him, said the widow; but I heard him. He went to the cupboard and took down the teapot and drank from it, just as he used to, and then he went to work at the stove. I laid and heard it, but thought it was one of the boys.

Who's there? said I, but there was no answer.

What are you doing there, said I.
That's my business, said a voice that I knew to be my husband's, because he always spoke in that pleasant way. I got up, and there wasn't nobody there.

The teeth of her auditors chattered.

Well, neighbor, what is the most Christian news this morning? said a gentleman to his friend.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers,
a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say
that our experience of more than FORTY years
in the Importation is not only a sufficient guarantee for the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables
us to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly
pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines
for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling
orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling
other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive
our best personal attention, and that every article
sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue

The Better Thought.

The Better Thought! how oft in days
When youthful passion fired my breast,
And drove me into fond ways,
Didst thou my wandering step arrest,
And whisper gently in my ear
That angel message fraught with love,
Check'd for the time my mad career,
And melt the heart long since could move!

There was no stern and harsh rebuke;
No "friend's advice," so true, so cold;
No message wise, such as in book,
Or by the teacher oft is told,
Which, like the pointless arrow, falls,
And rings perhaps with hollow sound,
But ne'er the wanderer recalls,
But ne'er inflicts the healing wound.

The voice was gentle, winning, mild,
Thy words told thou wert from above,
Like those with which the wayward child
Is wooed by a fond mother's love;
Or like a strain of music, stealing
Across the calm and moonlit sea,
Which moves the heart of sternest feeling,
And wakes its deeper harmonies.

Sweet was thy presence welcome guest;
And I, responsive to thy call,
Arose, and felt within my breast
A power that made the letters fall
From off my long-entranced soul.
And wove, as with a magic spell,
Griefs which yet owned the soft control
Of hopes that all might yet be well.

But ah! thou wert an injured guest;
But soon departed, soon forgot,
Were all the hopes of coming rest.
That clattered round the Better Thought—
The tender griefs, the firm resolves,
The yearnings after better days,
Like transient sunlight which dissolves,
And leaves no traces of its rays!

Yet I despair not—through the night
That long had reigned with tyrant sway,
E'en now I see the opening light,
The harbinger of coming day.
To heaven I now direct my prayer—
O God of love, forsake me not,
Grant that my waywardness may ne'er
Quench the returning Better Thought.

YEARS OF FAMINE AND PLENTY.—There was a good deal of pith in the Bible story of Pharaoh's seven years of famine and seven years of plenty. A Frenchman (Count Hugo) has made public the following table:

From 1816 to 1821 was a period of scarcity.
From 1822 to 1827 was a period of abundance.
From 1828 to 1833 was a period of scarcity.
From 1834 to 1837 was a period of abundance.
From 1838 to 1842 was a mixed period.
From 1843 to 1847 was a period of scarcity.
From 1848 to 1852 was a period of abundance.
From 1853 to 1857 was a period of scarcity.

We don't know how this will apply to the United States. I may fit some particular localities, but not all. It will do for an almanac or a new dream book.

Sadness is against nature, for it troubles her motions and renders distasteful whatever she has made amiable.

There is often but a slight separation between a woman's love and hate. Her keen teeth are very near her sweet lips.

"Jim, don't it rain hard?" remarked one of the boys to another during the late spell of weather. "No," was the reply. "I think it rains as easy as falling off a log."

If you'd keep your enemies from knowing any harm of you—don't let your friends know any.

Religion of the heart may truly and justly be called the heart of religion.

A man is most likely to fall down upon the ice when he ventures upon it slip shod.

"See here, auntie, what bird is it that rides on the tempest, and bids defiance to the storm?"

"Why, the American eagle, of course."

"Not as you know on—it is the weathercock."

Men seem anxious to undo the work of God. He made them of nothing, and they appear to be striving to make nothing of themselves.

An old lady being asked to subscribe to a newspaper, declined on the ground that when she wanted news she manufactured it.

The water that has no taste is purest; the rain that has no odor is freshest; and of all the modifications of manner, the most generally pleasing is simplicity.

Fashionable people are apt to starve their happiness in order to feed their vanity.

Miscellaneous.

The Stolen Child.

A TRUE NARRATIVE.

About the time that Illinois Territory became the State of Illinois, and the village of Colesgrove, so far as the name was concerned, was metamorphosed into Gilgrade, the County of Cathoon was suddenly thrown into a furor of excitement, by the startling announcement that a little child, six years old, the son of Mr. Flenner, had been lost in the woods. It was autumn—the time when wild plums were ripe—and Mrs. Flenner, in company with a woman, a neighbor, had gone to a place some-two miles up the bottom, known as "the plum thicket," in quest of the fruit, leaving little George at home to take care of himself.
On their return, he was missing, and though the alarm was spread, and a general search prosecuted for four days and nights, he was not found; nay, nor save a few tracks made by his little feet, in the mud of a creek not far from the house, the least trace of him could not be discovered. To all, his fate was a mystery; yet the most general supposition was, that he had been stolen by Indians, who were then lurking about the country, or that he had endeavored to follow his mother to
"the plum thicket," and losing his way,
had laid out till after night, and then fallen a prey to wolves and panthers.

It were not possible for an event to throw a deeper gloom over a people than did this over the Colesgrovians. Mr. Flenner was one of the first citizens of the settlement, loved and respected by all who knew him.
But this was not all; little George was more than loved. He was one of those bright, sprightly children, who work fully into one's affections at first sight; consequently it was not left for dotting parents, alone, to see his worth, and look up, as though Nebuchadnezzar's glass, from the promising child to maturity. All pictured for him a brilliant future; but alas! what uncertain things are human predictions! They are but the slenderest of cobwebs, which, blazing for one moment in the rays of the sun, are in the next from their fastenings by a passing zephyr, and swept off from sight, to float forever amid the useless gases of regions far above.

About nine years after the disappearance of little George, a company of Indians, almost in a starving condition, called at the house of Mr. Flenner, and offered to swap a white boy for turnips. The apparent age of the boy very nearly corresponded with that of the lost one, and though he had no resemblance in the least, his eyes being jet black, while those of little George were deep blue, and his hair dark and coarse; while that of the former was light and silky, Mr. Flenner felt a strange nearness for him, and without hesitation he paid the price demanded, and took him to adopt into his family.

The boy had, evidently, been among the Indians for a long time; in fact, he was now
the same as one of them, speaking their language alone; or at least, pretending to understand no other. Yet, Mr. Flenner and his good lady treated him as though he had been their own child; two causes, perhaps, actuated them. Their little George had possibly been stolen by, and was now under the tutelage of Indians. They were sadly mourning over his loss, and while they were doing so,
other parents were most likely suffering the same pangs for the boy which they now had in charge. And again, the adoption of the white savage might, in the event that he was still living, tend in some manner to aid in the recovery of their long lost child.

Weeks to the number of half a dozen rolled on. The new member of Mr. Flenner's family still remained at the house of his adoption, but Indian like, he was still sulky and disagreeable, evincing at times a restlessness, and an unmistakable disposition to return to the woods. Their very kind treatment alone, seemed to keep him with them,
yet the fact that he refused to receive instructions in the language which he had apparently lost, was evidence that he did not intend to stay. About this time an incident took place which gave matters a very new and strange feature. A short time before his disappearance, little George was presented with a small though beautiful wooden box, the handiwork of an ingenious neighbor. He almost idolized it—consequently it was ever after kept by the family as a sacred memento.
One day Mrs. Flenner had occasion to take it from its allotted retreat, and remove it to some other part of the house. As she passed him, the eyes of the boy fell upon it, and he started, with an expression of countenance that instantly attracted the lady's attention.
She paused and passed him the relic, which he grasped with an eager smile, and though there was a great secret about its manner of fastening, he opened it without the slightest inconvenience.

This was all very strange. Mrs. Flenner was really startled at first, but with the characteristic quickness of a woman, she soon sought out what to her appeared to be the possible cause of the phenomenon, if you will allow the term. Little George was still alive. This boy had been with him, and had heard him tell of a once happy home, of his beautiful box, and of all the mysteries connected with it. Such were her firm convictions, and forgetting that the boy could not understand her language, she sat down beside him, took the box in her hand, and with tears in her eyes commenced relating its history, and telling how some unknown cause, years ago, blasted the many fond hopes that she had expected to see realized in a promising and only son. For some time the boy listened in silence, and with as much attention, apparently, as he could have bestowed upon language to him perfectly intelligible.
As the story went on, a big bright tear rose from the fount of feeling, and leaping forth, went sparkling down his swarthy cheek.—
And when Mrs. Flenner, filling up with rapidly-waking remembrances, gave vent to her sorrow in woman's eloquent way, it was followed, not merely by another, but by a flood of tears, which told that though he was a savage to all external appearances, his heart had not yet lost its natural touch of refinement.

This, too, was strange, yet there was something still stranger to come; for, in the next instant the boy sprang to his feet, and throwing his arms around the neck of Mrs.
Flenner, exclaimed in perfect English, the first words she had heard him articulate:—
"George is not lost! You shall see him again! This is George—you are my own
dear mother!"

The reader may picture the scene that followed—I will not attempt to portray it. From that time on the boy found no difficulty in speaking and comprehending the English language. In fact, he did little else than talk from morn till night each successive day, for the joyous news spread over the settlement like wildfire, and the neighbors flocked in to see him, and hear his remarkable story.

Soon after his mother had started to "the plum thicket," an Indian squaw came to the house, and finding him alone, took him in her arms and carried him off, telling him
she was going to his ma. Having been accustomed to seeing Indians about the house,
he felt nothing of fear, but went cheerfully.
On reaching the creek where his tracks were afterwards seen, she put him down and made him wade across through the mud, while she went round to avoid leaving any sign. For two days and nights they remained in the vicinity of the settlement, she making him believe all the while that they were lost, but that they would soon find their way and reach his mother. And when he became uneasy, and showed a disposition to be noisy, she frightened him into silence by telling him that panthers would catch them unless they remained quiet. The searchers often came near them; on one occasion they lay in a large hollow log over an hour, while several men, without suspecting their proximity, sat upon it and talked about bears, panthers, wolves or Indians, having killed or taken some one away. The old squaw wisely perceived that they were bad men, and so little George kept silent when he should have done otherwise.

At the end of the time mentioned the squaw took her stolen charge across the river, where a band of Indians were waiting her, and with them journeyed far into the wilderness. The little "pale face" was adopted into the family of a chief who had lost a son, and straightway commenced his education as one of them. To convert him from a "pale face" to an Indian, required no little ceremony. They done many things by way of initiation; among others was to put some kind of fiery liquid into his eyes, which, though it gave him excessive pain, finally changed their color from blue to jet black.

Some years after his adoption, his Indian father was killed in battle—and he, consequently, passed into other hands; and from other hands into another tribe. The Indians who last had him in charge knew nothing of his history; and never for once suspected that, when hard times had driven them to the settlement, and they were offering him for sale, that the purchaser was his own father.
George knew it full well, however, and the idea of selling him for turnips, was an invention of his own; not that he wished again to be restored to civilization, for he had now become an Indian in every sense of the word, but because he wished once more to see his parents, after which he contemplated running away to his brethren of the forest, without letting the former suspect who he was. With this understanding, the Indians sold him.

George kept his resolution for six weeks, and doubtless would have kept it longer, but for the sudden appearance of the little box so loved by him in better days. Taking all in all he might as well have kept it, for his taste of savage life had completely blunted his capacity to appreciate civilization. Each day found him still more restless and dissatisfied, until, after having staid about four months with his parents, he disappeared, and was never heard of after. The most reasonable supposition is, that he struck out towards the Rocky Mountains, and re-united himself with the Indians for life. And, possibly, the predictions of his early friends are fulfilled:

they looked forward to his future greatness;
he may be great among the people who have received him as one of them.—Porter's Spirit.

A Mother's Grave.

Earth has some sacred spots where we feel like loosening the shoes from our feet, and treading with holy reverence; where common words of pleasure are unfeeling; places where friendship's hands have lingered in each other's, where vows have been plighted, and tears of parting shed. Oh, how the thoughts hover around such places, and travel back through immeasurable space to visit them. But of all the spots on the green earth, none is so sacred as that where rests waiting the resurrection, those we once cherished and loved. Hence, in all ages, the better portion of mankind have chosen the loved spots for the burial of their dead, and in those spots they have loved to wander at eventide to meditate and weep. But among all the chapel houses of the dead, if there is one spot more sacred than all the rest, it is a mother's grave. There sleeps the mother of our infancy—the guide of our youth—the counselor of our riper years—our friend when others deserted; she whose heart was a stranger to every other feeling but love—
and who could always find excuses for us
when we could find none for ourselves.—
There she sleeps, and we love the very earth for her sake.

Soaking Seeds before Sowing.

This practice, says the Country Gentleman, is not so extensively adopted in this country as it might be, with advantage both for the farm and the garden. In this respect we are far behind a people who are apt to regard with feelings nearly approaching to contempt, Liebig states, in his "Letters on Modern Agriculture," that no Chinese farmer sows a seed before it has been soaked in liquid manure, diluted with water, and has begun to germinate; and that experience has taught him that this operation tends not only to promote the more rapid and vigorous growth and development of the plant, but also to protect the seeds from the ravages of worms and insects. There would be not only some trouble, but some inconveniences also, in the adoption of this practice on an extensive scale; but we are pretty confident notwithstanding that those who commence it on a small scale will find it productive of advantage enough to induce them to extend their operations. We may suggest that we have, on more than one occasion, been informed by one of our correspondents that he makes much use of hen manure in water as a soak for his seeds.

A Sidewalk Anecdote.

Last winter an Irishman, recently landed on our shores, applied to a merchant on the wharf for work. Wishing to do him a kindness, the latter handed him a shovel, and pointing to the back of his store, told him to "shovel off the sidewalk." The merchant forgot all about the Irishman, until the lapse of an hour or two, when Teddy thrust his head into the counting room, (which was up stairs) and inquired—
"Mayhap ye'd be having a pick, sir?"
"A pick to get the snow off?" said the merchant smiling.

"The snow 'ud be off long since," replied Teddy, "an' the bricks too, for that matter,
but it's the side that sticks!"

In some alarm the merchant ran to his back window, and, sure enough, the fellow had thrown nearly all the pavement into the street, and made quite a hole.

"Good gracious, man, I only wanted you to shovel off the snow!"

"Arrah, sir," said Teddy, "didn't yer honor tell me to shovel off the sidewalk?"

Powder Manufactory.

A powder manufactory is to be started in California by a company which has just been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000.
The war has raised the price of powder so that it can be profitably made in California, where there is a large and steady demand for it for blasting purposes. The charcoal employed is from willow, which grows on all the valley and mountain streams there. Sulphur is very plentiful in many parts of the State, particularly in San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles counties, where vast beds of it exist, and it has already found its way into market. Seltzwater is also abundant at the head waters of the Pajaro river, in Santa Cruz county.

The Memory of the Dead.

In almost every household there is an enshrined memory, a sacred casket where a lock of shining hair, a ring or faded picture, tells of some one long since gone. The younger children, as they grow up, learn to look on the picture of the dead brother or sister as on the face of an angel. They wonder if they ever shall be as good as these were! They look with tender awe upon the various relics of a sister never known, the friends plaything, the unfinished piece of work with the rusted needle just where she left it; and seeing their mother's tears, and hearing her talk of the child that was or would have been more lovely and intelligent than any of the rest, they wearily wonder if they shall ever deserve to be loved as much as she was who is now in heaven!

The orphan longing for a mother dimly remembered is sure if she had lived she never could have dishonored her—never could have been ungrateful or disobedient.

Yet our daily life together is subject to many disturbances. Parents forget to be patient with children; the noisy, trying little things are often roughly treated; their feelings wounded, and their gayety checked;
children of a family quarrel and overbear;
friends grow critical and cold. To look upon the surface of general domestic and social life, it sometimes seems as if there were a few only would not be happier separated.
But when by death some are removed, then only can we measure the real depths of affection that was cherished for them.

One beautiful trait of our humanity is the tenderness with which we cherish the memory of the departed. Let death take from the household the troublesome and ungov-ernable child, and all that is remembered is his sweet and gentle words, his rare qualities,
his loving ways, his beauty and maleness.
The child stands before his parent's eyes,
not as what he was, but as what he might have been had all God put in him been perfected by love and grace. He is now always
"dear child," in their thought, and no longer selfish or unlovely. The children long for their dead companion with real and tender grief—they would be pleasanter were he back again; they are surprised to find how much they loved him. Friends long to have the opportunity, now lost, to show their love.
Why did I not prize him more—why did I not serve him better? Is the universal feeling.

Our cemeteries, carefully kept and richly ornamented, may sometimes betray the harsh ostentation of wealth, but usually the polished and elaborate marble speaks the tenderness of grief, striving to do here what it feels has been left undone before. Absence lends to a less degree the same halo of perfection.
So soon as we are separated from those we really love, then they seem more than ever desirable and necessary to us, and we send back messages of regret for past selfishness and untidiness. Perhaps it is a phase of selfish nature, this lamenting for those that are gone—a selfishness that looks for companions who give us every thing and need no forbearance or sacrifice of ours; and finding none such among the living, turns to the idealized memory of the dead. Yet it is a worthy feeling if it hallows the memory of those who are gone; and, still more, if it inspires us to a greater consideration for those who remain. But still children, scarcely conscious of it, bring down their parent's gray hairs to the grave, through wilfulness; still parents provoke their children, and withhold from them sympathy and help; still friends distrust, harass, try one another. If we could only, while together, realize that tenderness spent in unavailing longings for the dead; if we could only see each other as in the light of what we shall be—looking on our children, think of them as angels standing ever before the face of our Father—when tried by each other, remember how uncertain is our opportunity of enjoying each other, and how deep and lasting will be our self-reproach if "we fail to serve one another in love. But in this life, happiness is either always before us, not yet attained, or behind, buried beyond our enjoyment. Yet our duty at least is doubtless with those that remain, those that we once loved being gone—so to live that harmony, peace, and Christian culture may take the place in our social intercourse of harsh selfishness and inconsiderate neglect.—

Accepting an Invitation.

A Captain Mosely, one of the French overland expedition to California, had been staying at Willard's a couple of weeks, and during that time had been excessively annoyed by a particular cabinman, and determined to put a stop to it. Accordingly one day, coming out of the hotel, and being accosted as usual with "take a ride to-day, sir?" said he would—and he did, for he made the fellow drive him first to the Capitol, then to the War Department, then to the National Hotel, then back to the Capitol, and at last home to his hotel after some three hours. On stepping out of the cab, he politely asked the driver to take a drink with him, and this exercise being performed, inquired at the office for his letters, and started for his room. As he reached the stairs, the cabinman stopped him with—
"But you have not paid me!"
"Paid you for what?" demanded the apparently astonished Mosely.
"Why, for the ride."
"Gracious!" exclaimed Mosely, "here is a gentleman who for two successive weeks has had the politeness to ask me to ride, and when to-day I have found an opportunity to accept his polite invitation, asks me to pay for it!"

A loud laugh broke forth from the assembled bystanders, and the cabinman, finding himself sold, stood there and vomited, mous-
ing the pay for his three hours' drive.
He never asked Mosely to ride after that.

Borrowing Newspapers.

While it is complimentary to those who get up a newspaper to know that it has numerous borrowers as well as subscribers, it is slightly unpleasant to feel that this habit of borrowing is hardly a fair thing to the publisher. When a person is poor and does not subscribe for a paper solely from lack of means, but has a desire to peruse it, he or she is excusable; and for such we only wish their lives were cast in another places.— Such persons would subscribe if they could pay, and are too honest to subscribe and not pay. There are those who make a regular practice of borrowing the paper who are able to become subscribers. The paltry little annual subscription is hardly an inducement sufficient to make a man in moderate pecuniary circumstances, a regular dependent borrower. There is no such person whose moneyed means is unknown, and there is no able borrower of a newspaper but what gets some secret rebukes. The lender is all smiles when the person or his messenger asks a loan of the paper, but no sooner is the door shut upon him than a series of hints of his meanness and charges of ingratitude are uttered in presence of a whole family, men and women, boys and girls. This the borrower knows nothing of to be sure, and in fact, con-soles himself with the thought that his case is different; that his neighbor feels one says anything in regard to him, but rather likes to accommodate him, Be not deceived. You Mr. Able Borrower, are not more spared than any one else. The better way to get over this whole matter is to come up like a man and subscribe for the newspaper and be independent. By so doing you help the printer, and will find more self-satisfaction than you can in anxiously waiting till your neighbor has finished reading his paper, and then get a due modicum of cuts and thrusts and jibes for being a borrower.

Good Old Times.

"Uncle Dad Morton" of Vermont, who tells the following story, should possess, in connection with his invention, two or three of our hen-persuaders. His success would then be complete:
"Them ancestors of our'n didn't do nothing half-way. But there's an awful fall-out since them times. Why, in my time, when I was a boy, things went on more economical than now. We all worked. My work was to take care of the hens and chickens, (Dad is famous for his handling of the alphabet,) and I'll tell yer how I raised 'em. You know I've a very thick child, altho' a thinkin' 'cept when I've 'sleep. Well, it came to me one night to raise a big lot of chickens from one hen, and I'll tell yer how I did it. I took an old whiskey barrel and filled it up with fresh eggs, and then put it on the south side of the barn, with some horse manure around it, and then set the old hen on the bung-hole. The old critter kept her sittin', and in three weeks
I heerd a little peep. Then I put my ear to the spigot, when the peeping growed like a swarm of bees. I didn't say anything to the folks about the hatching, for they'd all the time told me I was a fool, but the next mornin' I knocked the head out of the barrel, and covered the barn floor, two deep, all over with little chickings. Now you may laugh
as much as you please, but it's true."

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

CODDINGTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL EXHIBITION. The exhibition at this School, on Friday, of last week, a notice of which we were obliged to defer until this number, on account of the crowded state of our columns, was an agreeable surprise, and realized the best wishes of its friends. The weather was ungenial,—notwithstanding, the attendance of visitors was large; parents and guardians were there, to look after their responsibilities, while the merry hum of voices, and happy, blooming faces, which met us every where, assured us that the rule of the pedagogue, and the restraints of the school room had been laid aside for a season, and that scenes of a different order were to be exhibited.

The classes, as a general thing, were ready and prompt—they were perfect in their parts. The opening piece, "Spring Time," by Miss Garrity, was a pathetic effusion, and effectively spoken.

The "Bark Hesperus," by Miss Perkins; "Excelsior," by Miss Fernald; "Stater's Song," by Miss M. Jones; "Love of Country," by Miss E. Jones, and others, were fine pieces of composition, and pretty specimens of elocution.

The "Dialogues," also, were very interesting, especially the "Juvenile Rebellion and Village Gossips." It was not so serious in its results, as the Rebellion of a Republic; the treatment was more judicious—to let the malcontents remain out in the cold, until they were willing to return to obedience.

The "Model School," came in for a share of commendation; The "School Committee Man," was a happy conception; a personification to be seen in real life—though we don't think it has an application in this quarter.

On the whole, the Exhibition was satisfactory throughout, and reflected much credit on the deserving teacher.

EXHIBITION. The young folks connected with the Universalist Society, in this town, propose to entertain their friends and the public on Fast evening, by one of those amusing and interesting performances, so favorably known in former years as a Sunday School Exhibition. The programme will consist of songs, dialogues, &c., some of a serious nature, others more laughable. It is useless to attempt to delineate with ink the pleasure enjoyed at these moral and social gatherings. Let us conclude by saying that no pains has been spared to make this exhibition equal to those in years passed and gone.

ONE OF THE WOUNDED. George H. Lingham, one of the Quincy boys wounded in the battle at Newburn, (N. C.) on the 14th inst., arrived in this place on Thursday afternoon, and was met at the depot by his bosom companion. He received a slight wound in the arm, nothing of a serious character, and is recovering as fast as could be reasonably expected.

NORFOLK AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. This popular association held its annual meeting at Dedham, on Wednesday. The attendance was large, and the proceedings harmonious and interesting. The following officers were elected, together with a Board of Trustees for each town, and a Supervisory Committee, whose duty it is to visit the best farms in the county, and report improvements and progress: President, Marshall P. Wilder of Dorchester; Vice Presidents, John Gardner of Dedham, Charles Breck of Milton, Joseph H. Billings of West Roxbury, Otis Cary of Foxboro', John H. Robinson of Dorchester, S. W. Richardson of Franklin; Corresponding Secretary, Charles C. Sewall of Medfield; Recording Secretary, Henry O. Hildreth of Dedham; Treasurer, Chauncey C. Churchill of Dedham; Executive Committee, Marshall P. Wilder of Dorchester, Aaron D. Weld of West Roxbury, Hollis H. Hunnewell of Needham, Amos A. Lawrence of Brookline, Daniel Denny of Dorchester, Truman Clarke of Walpole; Finance Committee and Auditors, Martin B. Inches of Dedham, Charles Hamant of Medfield, Lewis H. Kingsbury of Dedham.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS. The Committee to divide the State into Districts for the choice of Representatives to Congress have made their report. It cuts up Norfolk more than any other County in the State.—There are now only ten instead of eleven Districts, four of which contain some of the towns in Norfolk County, viz:—

District No. 2—Bainbridge, Canton, Cohasset, Dorchester, Milton, Quincy, Randolph, Sharon, Stoughton and Weymouth.

District No. 3—Roxbury and Brookline.

District No. 7—Needham, Dover, Dedham, Medfield and West Roxbury.

District No. 8—Bellingham, Franklin, Wrentham, Walpole, Medway and Foxborough.

VICTIMS OF FASHION. The London Critic has counted eighteen deaths of females in the last three months, from the fashion of wearing crinoline.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, March 25, 1862.

The progress of our arms, proclaims victory in all quarters. The country has no longer any misgivings that the rebellion will be put down. It is written in the destiny of fate; and while we sorrow for the loss of life and the National calamities incident to war, the sacrifice is worthy of the maintenance of our liberties, and the re-union of the States once more in amity and peace. The signs are auspicious. Maryland, Delaware, Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee are now open to trade, and intercourse with the North, and soon Virginia, and North Carolina will be so. Cotton and tobacco are now offered in exchange for the manufactured goods of New England, which, as trade expands cannot fail to produce a powerful re-action for the benefit of the industrial classes of the North and West. The evils of the present civil war will be felt for a generation, but a gradual return to National prosperity will be much to enable us soon to regard the evils and sorrows of the present day as the things of the past. At the close of the war, with a debt of one billion of dollars resting upon the shoulders of our country, the National domain, valued at sixteen billions of dollars, will insure its payment, and give Uncle Sam quite a margin to begin life anew. The Boston Herald of Tuesday, comes out with a leader in favor of President Lincoln's course. He maintains that Mr. Lincoln has some of those strong traits of character, which distinguished General Jackson, meaning, we suppose, the taking of responsibility and "going ahead." The Emancipation Message is regarded as a step, tending to unite discordant elements in Congress. The Herald argues that as our army advances into rebel territory, slavery cannot stand, while the country is under martial law, for the slaves are driven away in one direction and run away in another. This is one of the logical consequences of the war. The President's plan proposes colonizing fugitive slaves somewhere in a climate suited to that race. In this he exhibits statesmanship, and his recommendations are entitled to a fair and candid consideration. The Herald says that Mr. Lincoln is a far more able man than many suppose, and will carry the country through her troubles triumphantly. The sentiments of the Herald are those of the Democratic press generally throughout the loyal States.

The weather is beautiful to-day, and our streets are thronged with people and vehicles. Mechanics begin to find employment. The burnt district at the North-end is soon to be re-built over and a prospect is on foot to open a new street from the Massachusetts Bank in State street through Corn Court, to Faneuil Hall. Lane and Reed's old building erected in 1687, and perhaps the old Governor Hancock Tavern, the most antique edifice of any in our city are likely to give way to modern structures. Trade generally is reviving and confidence in business operations is on the increase.

In the State Senate on Monday, the Hingham and Quincy Turnpike Bill was debated and passed to be engrossed. We do not know its merits.

The House resolves in approval of the recent Message of the President of the United States coming up a motion to amend them was proposed so as to approve all the acts of Mr. Lincoln in the prosecution of the war. Mr. Swan said he should vote against the amendment and the original resolve. He came here to legislate for the Commonwealth, and he did not feel himself called upon to legislate on National affairs. He was ready and willing to sustain the National and State administrations in a vigorous prosecution of the war; but he did not wish to discuss the subject of slavery. He thought that Massachusetts had passed too many resolutions upon the subject. After some further debate the matter was passed over for future consideration.

The Springfield Republican has an excellent hit on the proposed changes of school books by the Legislature, it discourses as follows:—

"It originates with book publishers, and is mercenary in its motive. The teachers of the State do not ask for any such action, and the parents, if they were consulted, would unanimously remonstrate against it. Indeed, if any revision of the existing law is required, it is in the direction of more stringent restrictions upon the changes in books."

The Post Office Service is RECOVERED TERRITORY. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says the Post Office Department is rapidly following up the operations of the army by the re-establishment of post offices and post routes.—Post offices have been re-opened in various parts of Tennessee. Numerous applications have already been made for the appointment of a postmaster at Nashville. The people of the recovered portion of the seceded States manifest great anxiety to resume their wonted relations to the Union Government in this respect.

NO REST FOR THE POOR NEGRO.—The Constitutional Convention in Illinois has voted to exclude negroes from a residence in the State.

Fast Day Proclamation.

The time is at hand when the People of Massachusetts are wont to unite in their annual public and penitential offering to Almighty God, of Prayer and Humiliation.

I do, therefore, with the advice and consent of the Council, appoint THURSDAY, the third day of April next, to be observed throughout this Commonwealth as a day of public HUMILIATION, FASTING and PRAYER.

From every altar may the flame of pure devotion arise to Heaven, and the sweet incense of contrition, penitence and humility ascend on high; so that worthily lamenting our sins we may humbly hope forgiveness of the same through the Infinite and Divine mercy and favor, manifested in the life and doctrines of the blessed Saviour of mankind.

May our self-examination be sincere and faithful, searching out all the hidden causes, in our selfishness, prejudice or ignorance, of every public disorder and evil, as well as every private disobedience and wrong.

May the trying experiment through which this people are borne lead them to a manner as well as more Christian faith in the Providence of God, and the power of His Truth. May they learn the wisdom of humble and constant obedience to duty, to reverence the rights and to value the happiness and serve the welfare of all that great family of immortal men, to whom the Gospel is sent and to whom the inspiration of the Almighty has given understanding.

In tender sympathy with the bereaved, the suffering and the broken hearted, with all those who are in any way afflicted or distressed in mind, body or estate, let us pray for their consolation and deliverance; while we also pledge ourselves in solemn vows to God, to our Country and to mankind, to stand always for the defence and maintenance of Truth, Justice and Righteousness in all the trials of life and in the work of duty.

And may the Divine mercy be meted to us all according to our several necessities; granting a happy issue to our country out of all the trials which beset the nation; restoring peace and good will between all her people; delivering the oppressed, rebuilding the waste places, reviving the energies and hopes of busy enterprise; blessing us on the land and on the sea, in all the ways and arts of useful industry, in all efforts to cultivate the intellect and expand the heart. And while the voice of commanding duty shall continue to summon our sons and daughters to the fields of war, may Almighty God shield them from the arrows of the foe, cover their heads in the day of battle, shelter, strengthen and encourage them, and give to them constant deliverance and victory.

JOHN A. ANDREW.

The High School Examination will take place on Wednesday next, instead of Tuesday, as announced last week.

POST OFFICES. The number of Post Offices in Norfolk County, which pay over four hundred dollars salary, according to the "Blue Book" of 1860.

Brookline,	$499.98
Canton,	590.52
Dedham,	815.12
Jamaica Plains,	452.79
Milton,	534.35
Quincy,	710.91
Roxbury,	450.60
Roxbury,	1,618.68

No Post Master's salary can exceed two thousand dollars annually. But the rent received for the use of Boxes are perquisites allowed by the Government to these officers, which materially increases their yearly incomes.

In large towns and cities these fees amount to double and treble their salaries. Offices whose annual receipts are under a thousand dollars, receive a per centage on the amount of business done—when it exceeds that sum, they then become salaried offices.

A NARROW ESCAPE. On Saturday afternoon, 22d inst., as four little boys were playing on some cakes of ice on the marshes near Savin Hill, Dorchester, the receding tide carried them into deeper water. They had drifted considerable distance, and the ice was gradually breaking to pieces, before they succeeded in attracting the attention of any one, but fortunately being discovered by Mr. Hilyard, father of one of the lads, he swam out to them with an old door, the only available thing he could find.

Two of the boys fell into the water before he reached them, but were pulled back upon the ice again by their companions. Mr. Hilyard succeeded in getting the boys on the door, after placing it upon cakes of ice, but was unable to reach the shore until two gentlemen, Messrs. Hall and Newbury, reached the party with a boat from the other side of the hill. The boys were so completely benumbed by the wet and cold, as to be incapable of making any exertions.

A WARNING TO JEALOUS HUSBANDS.—A young man in Providence, (N. H.) who had a very handsome wife, recently became dissatisfied with the attention of others towards her (without a cause, of course), and started off and traveled some two or three hundred miles, and visited several hospitals for the purpose of catching the small-pox, so that he could give it to his wife, thinking if she became pretty well pitted upon her face it would have a tendency to keep away her admirers. But the fun of the joke was, that he took the disease himself, went home, and died, and the young widow, who did not take it at all, has since married a handsome man who is not jealous.

IRON CLAD STEAMERS. The Monitor cost $375,200, and her first labor has been equivalent to saving many hundred times that sum. The original cost of such vessels is hardly one half that of common first class frigates, while they are not liable, as our frigates are, to decay, and consequently will cost little for repairs. It is held that, on the score of economy alone, keeping efficiency out of the question, the best policy of our government will be to have a sufficient supply of iron-clad ships and floating batteries as soon as they can be constructed.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Secretary of State has granted six months leave of absence to T. Bigelow Lawrence, Esq., Consul at Florence, to afford him opportunity to accept the appointment of Major conferred upon him by the Governor of Massachusetts, and to act as aide-de-camp to Gen. Keyes.

A young man by the name of Woodbury, shot an eagle at the Cove, (Beverly) on Sunday, 9th inst. The bird measured about eight feet from tip to tip of its wings.

Eight hundred men are employed in the manufacture of arms in the Bridesburg Arsenal, near Philadelphia.

The rebel flags captured at Roanoke Island and sent to Governor Andrew have been suspended in the Representatives' Hall of the Massachusetts Legislature. The centre window is covered with the smaller, or Confederate States, "national" flag; the pole of the North Carolina Fifth regimental standard is fastened in the window towards the east, with the flag depending downwards; and the "Liberty and Death," regimental color is secured in a similar way from the western window.

According to the latest political rumors from Italy the King is tired of his Prime Minister Ricasoli, and will probably substitute Rattazzi in his place.

The only member of the Wisconsin Legislature who is a native of the State, is Fred. S. Ellis, who was born at Green Bay, 32 years ago. He is the oldest inhabitant, in fact, of Wisconsin, having been the first white child born there.

There are but a few regiments in the Southern army whose terms of service expired at the beginning of this month. The mass of the rebel troops are enlisted until May next.

The Southern Commissioners have been denied any space in the World's Fair at London, on the ground that the allotment of a place to them might be construed into an implied recognition of the confederacy.

The terms of enlistment of another large batch of rebel soldiers will expire in May; and as so many of them have openly said they were sick of the war, we have reason to believe that very few will voluntarily rejoin the army.

During the year 1861 there were 490 buildings erected in Boston at a cost of $3,706,550.

The loss of men on board the frigate Congress, which was sunk by the Merrimack, was 123. Of these 94 were killed in the action.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says it is rumored that the Bates Manufacturing Co., are to put into immediate operation all the machinery in their mills.

The whole coast of Georgia, from South Carolina to Florida is under our control.

A lieutenant-colonel in an Iowa regiment at the Fort Donelson fight had eight bullets put through his coat and yet sustained no injury. He is bullet proof.

The Federal officers created by the tax bill as it stands, it is estimated, will amount to twenty-six thousand.

Arlington House, Gen. Lee's former mansion, is now an army hospital.

George W. Morton, Acting Assistant Paymaster, and Christopher A. Spear, Paymaster's Steward, of the steam gunboat Forbes, wrecked on Carrizosa Island, have been ordered to the U. S. Steamer Hetzel at Newburn, North Carolina.

IRON CLAD STEAMERS. The Monitor cost $375,200, and her first labor has been equivalent to saving many hundred times that sum. The original cost of such vessels is hardly one half that of common first class frigates, while they are not liable, as our frigates are, to decay, and consequently will cost little for repairs. It is held that, on the score of economy alone, keeping efficiency out of the question, the best policy of our government will be to have a sufficient supply of iron-clad ships and floating batteries as soon as they can be constructed.

Free Chowder will be served at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

SICILIAN HENS. We learn from the Hingham Journal that Mr. John Wilson of Cohasset, imported a few of these fowls last summer. They lay remarkably well, and have never exhibited any inclination to set. It is said they never set. From these, in September last, he raised chickens, which now (February) lay daily. In their native home, they commence laying when four months of age. Doubtless spring chickens would do so here. They are of various colors, fine forms, and handsome plumage.—Eggs of good size. To those desirous of breeding, eggs will be furnished.

SOLDIERS' LETTERS PROHIBITED. The writing of letters by soldiers in the army of the Potomac now on the road to Richmond is prohibited by an order issued from headquarters. Letters written just before the march was commenced, were detained three days or more at Washington before they were despatched northward. How long this rule will be enforced it is impossible to say. Those who have friends in the army and receive no letters will understand the reason.

DISEASED CATTLE. The Cattle Commissioners recently paid a visit to a farm in Quincy, for the purpose of examining the cattle, and found them to be badly diseased. It was discovered that one of the herd had been sent to Shrewsbury, and on Wednesday the Commissioners went to the latter place, and found the Quincy heifer on a farm owned by Mr. Houghton of Dorchester, and carried on by E. K. Pratt. These two named gentlemen are joint owners of the stock on the place. The Commissioners killed the five cows and two yoke of oxen. The first two cows killed were found to be diseased. Another cow was diseased in both lungs; a cyst the size of a man's fist being found in the lower lobe of the left lung, and a still larger one in the anterior part of the lobe of the right lung. Two of the cows proved to be healthy. Of the four oxen killed only one was found to be diseased. We learn that the Commissioners are to visit other farms in the County, where it is feared an infection among the cattle exists.—Worcester Spy.

Administrator's Sale OF Real Estate, &c., in Quincy.

PURSUANT to a license from the Probate Court for the County of Norfolk, will be sold at Public Auction, on THURSDAY, the 17th day of April next, at 3 o'clock, in the afternoon, upon the premises, the Land and Buildings, formerly owned and occupied by

CHARLES A. CUMMINGS, Florist, deceased, used as a Nursery and Greenhouse, situated on Sea street in Quincy, consisting of about one-half an acre of very superior land, with buildings thereon, viz:—

A Stable 36 by 18 feet, attached to which is an Office, 14 by 10 feet, with a basement under both. Also, connected with the above is a lean to Greenhouse, the main part 30 by 16 feet with an addition 42 by 12 feet. The buildings were all built within three years, and are of a substantial kind.

The Land contains a good variety of dwarf and standard pear, peach, apple, cherry and ornamental trees, about 500 in all; also, over 250 choice flowering shrubs, 100 rose bushes; 100 grape vines, two and three years old; currant, blackberry and gooseberry bushes; also, choice hardy flowering plants.

The property is located in the business part of the town, within two minutes' walk of the railroad depot and post office. As there is no one engaged in the business within five miles, it offers a rare chance for any one wishing a permanent and profitable business.

Immediately after the above, will be sold the Homestead of the late C. A. Cummings, situated on the corner of the Greenhouse, comprising one-third of an acre of land well stocked with choice apple and pear trees, grape vines, currant bushes, &c., &c.

The house is two-story, containing twelve rooms, and in good repair. Adjoining is a small barn and woodhouse.

Sale of the Homestead subject to the Widow's right of dower.

For further particulars apply at the premises or address GEO. H. CUMMINGS, Adm'r. Quincy, March 29th, 1862. 3w

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

CODDINGTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL EXHIBITION. The exhibition at this school, on Friday, of last week, a notice of which we were obliged to defer until this number, on account of the crowded state of our columns, was an agreeable surprise, and realized the best wishes of its friends. The weather was ungenial,—notwithstanding, the attendance of visitors was large; parents and guardians were there, to look after their responsibilities, while the merry hum of voices, and happy, blooming faces, which met us every where, assured us that the rule of the pedagogues, and the restraints of the school room had been laid aside for a season, and that scenes of a different order were to be exhibited.

The classes, as a general thing, were ready and prompt—they were perfect in their parts. The opening piece, "Spring Time," by Miss Garrity, was a pathetic effusion, and effectively spoken.

The "Bark Hesperus," by Miss Perkins; "Excelsior," by Miss Fernald; "Stater's Song," by Miss M. Jones; "Love of Country," by Miss E. Jones, and others, were fine pieces of composition, and pretty specimens of elocution.

The "Dialogues," also, were very interesting, especially the "Juvenile Rebellion and Village Gossips." It was not so serious in its results, as the Rebellion of a Republic; the treatment was more judicious—to let the malcontents remain out in the cold, until they were willing to return to obedience.

The "Model School," came in for a share of commendation; The "School Committee Man," was a happy conception; a personification to be seen in real life—though we don't think it has an application in this quarter.

On the whole, the Exhibition was satisfactory throughout, and reflected much credit on the deserving teacher.

EXHIBITION. The young folks connected with the Universalist Society, in this town, propose to entertain their friends and the public on Fast evening, by one of those amusing and interesting performances, so favorably known in former years as a Sunday School Exhibition. The programme will consist of songs, dialogues, &c., some of a serious nature, others more laughable. It is useless to attempt to delineate with ink the pleasure enjoyed at these moral and social gatherings. Let us conclude by saying that no pains has been spared to make this exhibition equal to those in years passed and gone.

ONE OF THE WOUNDED. George H. Lingham, one of the Quincy boys wounded in the battle at Newburn, (N. C.) on the 14th inst., arrived in this place on Thursday afternoon, and was met at the depot by his bosom companion. He received a slight wound in the arm, nothing of a serious character, and is recovering as fast as could be reasonably expected.

NORFOLK AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. This popular association held its annual meeting at Dedham, on Wednesday. The attendance was large, and the proceedings harmonious and interesting. The following officers were elected, together with a Board of Trustees for each town, and a Supervisory Committee, whose duty it is to visit the best farms in the county, and report improvements and progress: President, Marshall P. Wilder of Dedham; Vice Presidents, John Gardner of Dedham, Charles Brock of Milton, Joseph H. Billings of West Roxbury, Otis Cary of Foxboro, John H. Robinson of Dedham, S. W. Richardson of Franklin; Corresponding Secretary, Charles C. Sewall of Medfield; Recording Secretary, Henry O. Hildreth of Dedham; Treasurer, Chauncey C. Churchill of Dedham; Executive Committee, Marshall P. Wilder of Dedham, Aaron D. Weld of West Roxbury, Hollis H. Hanzewell of Needham, Amos A. Lawrence of Brookline, Daniel Denny of Dorchester, Truman Clarke of Walpole; Finance Committee and Auditors, Martin B. Inches of Dedham, Charles Hamant of Medfield, Lewis H. Kingsbury of Dedham.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS. The Committee to divide the State into Districts for the choice of Representatives to Congress have made their report. It cuts up Norfolk more than any other County in the State.—There are now only ten instead of eleven Districts, four of which contain some of the towns in Norfolk County, viz:—
District No. 2—Bainbridge, Canton, Cohasset, Dorchester, Milton, Quincy, Randolph, Sharon, Stoughton and Weymouth.
District No. 3—Roxbury and Brookline.
District No. 7—Needham, Dover, Dedham, Medfield and West Roxbury.
District No. 8—Bellingham, Franklin, Wrentham, Walpole, Medway and Foxborough.

VICTIMS OF FASHION. The London Critic has counted eighteen deaths of females in the last three months, from the fashion of wearing crinoline.

Purchasers of Carpets should read the advertisement of the New England Carpet Co.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, MARCH 26, 1862.

The progress of our arms, proclaims victory in all quarters. The country has no longer any misgivings that the rebellion will be put down. It is written in the destiny of fate; and while we sorrow for the loss of life and the National calamities incident to war, the sacrifice is worthy of the maintenance of our liberties, and the re-union of the States once more in amity and peace. The signs are auspicious. Maryland, Delaware, Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee are now open to trade, and intercourse with the North, and soon Virginia, and North Carolina will be so. Cotton and tobacco are now offered in exchange for the manufactured goods of New England, which, as trade expands cannot fail to produce a powerful re-action for the benefit of the industrial classes of the North and West. The evils of the present civil war will be felt for a generation, but a gradual return to National prosperity will do much to enable us soon to regard the evils and sorrows of the present day as the things of the past. At the close of the war, with a debt of one billion of dollars resting upon the shoulders of our country, the National domain, valued at sixteen billions of dollars, will insure its payment, and give Uncle Sam quite a margin to begin life anew. The Boston Herald of Tuesday, comes out with a leader in favor of President Lincoln's course. He maintains that Mr. Lincoln has some of those strong traits of character, which distinguished General Jackson, meaning, we suppose, the taking of responsibility and "going ahead." The Emancipation Message is regarded as a step, tending to unite discordant elements in Congress. The Herald argues that as our army advances into rebel territory, slavery cannot stand, while the country is under martial law, for the slaves are driven away in one direction and run away in another. This is one of the logical consequences of the war. The President's plan proposes colonizing fugitive slaves somewhere in a climate suited to that race. In some he exhibits statesmanship, and his recommendations are entitled to a fair and candid consideration. The Herald says that Mr. Lincoln is a far more able man than many suppose, and will carry the country through her troubles triumphantly. The sentiments of the Herald are those of the Democratic press generally throughout the loyal states.

The weather is beautiful to-day, and our streets are thronged with people and vehicles. Mechanics begin to find employ. The burnt district at the North-end is soon to be re-built over and a prospect is on foot to open a new avenue from the Massachusetts Bank in State street through Corn Court, to Faneuil Hall. Lane and Reed's old building erected in 1687, and perhaps the old Governor Hancock Tavern, the most antique edifice of our city are likely to give way to modern structures. Trade generally is reviving and confidence in business operations is on the increase.

In the State Senate on Monday, the Hingham and Quincy Turnpike Bill was debated and passed to be engrossed. We do not know its merits.

The House resolves in approval of the recent Message of the President of the United States coming up a motion to amend them was proposed so as to approve all the acts of Mr. Lincoln in the prosecution of the war. Mr. Swain said he should vote against the amendment and the original resolve. He came here to legislate for the Commonwealth, and he did not feel himself called upon to legislate on National affairs. He was ready and willing to sustain the National and State administrations in a vigorous prosecution of the war; but he did not wish to discuss the subject of slavery. He thought that Massachusetts had passed too many resolutions upon the subject. After some further debate the matter was passed over for future consideration.

The Springfield Republican has an excellent bit on the proposed changes of school books by the Legislature, it discourses as follows:

"It originates with book publishers, and is merely a money motive. The teachers of the State do not ask for any such action, and the parents, if they were consulted, would unanimously renege against it. Indeed, if any revision of the existing law is required, it is in the direction of more stringent restrictions upon the changes in books. The tax imposed upon parents and guardians by frequent changes of text-books has hitherto been very burdensome, and it is no time now to add to the burdens of the people."

THE POSTAL SERVICE IN RECOVERED TERRITORY. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says the Post Office Department is rapidly following up the operations of the army by the re-establishment of post offices and post routes.—Post offices have been re-opened in various parts of Tennessee. Numerous applications have already been made for the appointment of a postmaster at Nashville. The people of the recovered portion of the seceded States manifest great anxiety to resume their wonted relations to the Union Government in this respect.

Fast Day Proclamation.

The time is at hand when the People of Massachusetts are wont to unite in their annual public and penitential offering to Almighty God, of Prayer and Humiliation. I do, therefore, with the advice and consent of the Council, appoint THURSDAY, the third day of April next, to be observed throughout this Commonwealth as a day of public HUMILIATION, FASTING and PRAYER.

From every altar may the flame of pure devotion arise to Heaven, and the sweet incense of contrition, penitence and humility ascend on high; so that worthily lamenting our sins we may humbly hope forgiveness of the same through the Infinite and Divine mercy and favor manifested in the life and doctrines of the blessed Saviour of mankind.

May our self-examination be sincere and faithful, searching out all the hidden causes, in our selfishness, prejudice or ignorance, of every public disorder and evil, as well as every private disobedience and wrong.

May the trying experiment through which this people are borne lead them to a manlier as well as more Christian faith in the Providence of God, and the power of His Truth. May they learn the wisdom of humble and constant obedience to duty, to reverence the rights and to value the happiness and serve the welfare of all that great family of immortal men, to whom the Gospel is sent and to whom the inspiration of the Almighty has given understanding.

In tender sympathy with the bereaved, the suffering and the broken-hearted, with all those who are in any way afflicted or distressed in mind, body or estate, let us pray for their consolation and deliverance; while we also pledge ourselves in solemn vows to God, to our Country and to mankind, to stand always for the defence and maintenance of Truth, Justice and Righteousness in all the trials of life and in the work of duty.

And may the Divine mercy be united to us all according to our several necessities; granting a happy issue to our country out of all the trials which beset the nation; restoring peace and good will between all her people, delivering the oppressed, rebuilding the waste places, reviving the energies and hopes of busy enterprise; blessing us on the land in the day of the sea, in all the ways and arts of useful industry, in all efforts to cultivate the intellect and expand the heart. And while the voice of commanding duty shall continue to summon our sons and daughters to the fields of war, may Almighty God shield them from the arrows of the foe, cover their heads in the day of battle, shelter, strengthen and encourage them; and give to their constant deliverance and victory.

JOHN A. ANDREW.

The High School Examination will take place on Wednesday next, instead of Tuesday, as announced last week.

POST OFFICES. The number of Post Offices in Norfolk County, which pay over four hundred dollars salary, according to the "Blue Book" of 1860.

Brookline,	$499.98
Dedham,	500.52
Dorchester,	815.12
Jamaica Plains,	452.79
Milton,	534.35
Quincy,	710.91
Randolph,	459.60
Roxbury,	1,618.68

No Post Master's salary can exceed two thousand dollars annually. But the rent received for the use of Boxes are perquisites allowed by the Government to these officers, which materially increases their yearly incomes.

In large towns and cities these fees amount to double and treble their salaries. Officers whose annual receipts are under a thousand dollars, receive a per centage on the amount of business done—when it exceeds that sum, they then become salaried officers.

A NARROW ESCAPE. On Saturday afternoon, 22d inst., as four little boys were playing on some cakes of ice on the marshes near Savin Hill, Dorchester, the receding tide carried them out into deeper water. They had drifted considerable distance, and the ice was gradually breaking to pieces, before they succeeded in attracting the attention of any one, but fortunately being discovered by Mr. Hilyard, father of one of the lads, he swam out to them with an old door, the only available thing he could find.

Two of the boys fell into the water before he reached them, but were pulled back upon the ice again by their companions. Mr. Hilyard succeeded in getting the boys on the door, after placing it upon cakes of ice, but was unable to reach the shore until two gentlemen, Messrs. Hall and Newbury, reached the party with a boat from the other side of the hill. The boys were so completely benumbed by the wet and cold, as to be incapable of making any exertions.

A WARNING TO JEALOUS HUSBANDS.—A young man in Providence, (N. H.) who had a very handsome wife, recently became dissatisfied with the attention of others towards her (without a cause, of course,) and started off and traveled some two or three hundred miles, and visited several hospitals for the purpose of catching the small-pox, so that he could give it to his wife, thinking if she become pretty well pitted upon her face it would have a tendency to keep away her admirers. But the fun of the joke was, that he took the disease himself, went home, and died, and the young widow, who did not take it at all, has since married a handsome man who is not jealous.

NO REST FOR THE POOR NEGRO.—The Constitutional Convention in Illinois has voted to exclude negroes from a residence in the State.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Secretary of State has granted six months leave of absence to T. Bigelow Lawrence, Esq., Consul at Florence, to afford him opportunity to accept the appointment of Major conferred upon him by the Governor of Massachusetts, and to act as aide-de-camp to Gen. Keyes.

A young man by the name of Woodbury, shot an eagle at the Cove, (Beverly) on Sunday, 9th inst. The bird measured about eight feet from tip to tip of its wings.

Eight hundred men are employed in the manufacture of arms in the Briceburg Arsenal, near Philadelphia.

The rebel flag captured at Roanoke Island and Governor Andrew has been suspended in the Representatives' Hall of the Massachusetts Legislature. The centre window is covered with the smaller, or Confederate States, "national" flag; the pole of the North Carolina Fifth regimental standard is fastened in the window towards the east, with the flag depending downwards; and the "Liberty and Death," regimental colors secured in a similar way from the western window.

According to the latest political rumors Italy's old King is tired of his Prime Minister Ricciotti, and will probably substitute Rattazzi in his place.

The only member of the Wisconsin Legislature who is a native of the State, is Fred. S. Ellis, who was born at Green Bay, 32 years ago. He is the oldest inhabitant, in fact, of Wisconsin, having been the first white child born there.

There are but a few regiments in the Southern army whose terms of service expired at the beginning of this month. The mass of the rebel troops are enlisted until May next.

The Southern Commissioners have been denied any space in the World's Fair at London, on the ground that the allotment of a place to them might be construed into an implied recognition of the confederacy.

The terms of enlistment of another large batch of rebel soldiers will expire in May; and as so many of them have openly said they were sick of the war, we have reason to believe that very few will voluntarily rejoin the army.

During the year 1861 there were 490 buildings erected in Boston at a cost of $3,706,550.

Down with the Yankees.—N. O. Delta. "Don't be impatient. You'll find that they will be 'down' soon enough, we guess."—Louisville Journal.

Paymaster McKean Buchanan, who was on board the frigate Cumberland when she was attacked and sunk by the Merrimac, has arrived at his home in Charleston, Mass. He is a brother to Flag Officer Franklin Buchanan, who commanded the Merrimac.

There will be more work done this season in the way of building and improvement of the great mills in Lowell than has been done for some twelve years.

From present indications, says the Delawarean, the largest peach crop ever gathered in Delaware will reward the labors of our husbandmen this year.

"FANNY FERN" A SECESSIONIST. The New York Leader is informed that "Fanny Fern" has leaved from her husband, Mr. Penn, on the ground of alleged misusage, not only on his part but that of one of his relatives.

The Skowhegan (Me.) Clarion says the potato trade is the chief business now done in that place. Everybody is dipping into it.—Price 35 cents per bushel.

Who finds all the umbrellas that every body loses? Every man we meet loses the umbrella he buys, but we have never got acquainted with the man that finds them. Can any one answer the question before the next rain?

The loss of men on board the frigate Congress, which was sunk by the Merrimac, was 123. Of these 94 were killed in the action.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says it is rumored that the Bates Manufacturing Co., are put into immediate operation all the machinery in their mills.

The whole coast of Georgia, from South Carolina to Florida is under our control.

A lieutenant-colonel in an Iowa regiment at the Fort Donelson fight had eight bullets put through his coat and yet sustained no injury. He is bullet proof.

The Federal officers created by the tax bill as assessors, is estimated, will amount to twenty-six thousand.

Arlington House, Gen. Lee's former mansion, is now an army hospital.

George W. Morton, Acting Assistant Paymaster, and Christopher A. Spear, Paymaster's Steward, of the steam gunboat Forbes, wrecked on Carriuck Island, have been ordered to the U. S. Steamer Hetzel at Newburn, North Carolina.

IRON CLAD STEAMERS. The Monitor cost $275,200, and her first labor has been equivalent to saving many hundred times that sum. The original cost of such vessels is hardly one half that of common first class frigates, while they are not liable, as our frigates are, to decay, and consequently will cost little for repairs. It is held that, on the score of economy alone, keeping efficiency out of the question, the best policy of our government will be to have a sufficient supply of iron-clad ships and floating batteries as soon as they can be constructed.

Free Chowder will be served at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

SICILIAN HENS. We learn from the Hingham Journal that Mr. John Wilson of Cohasset, imported a few of these fowls last summer. They lay remarkably well, and have never exhibited any inclination to set. It is said they never set. From these, in September last, he raised chickens, which now (February) lay daily. In their native home, they commence laying when four months of age. Doubtless spring chickens would do so here. They are of various colors, fine forms, and handsome plumage.—Eggs of good size. To those desirous of breeding, eggs will be furnished.

SOLDIERS' LETTERS PROHIBITED. The writing of letters by soldiers in the army of the Potomac now on the road to Richmond is prohibited by an order issued from headquarters. Letters written just before the march was commenced, were detained three days or more at Washington before they were despatched northward. How long this rule will be enforced it is impossible to say. Those who have friends in the army and receive no letters will understand the reason.

DISEASED CATTLE. The Cattle Commissioners recently paid a visit to a farm in Quincy, for the purpose of examining the cattle, for the purpose of being badly diseased. It was discovered that one of the herd had been sent to Shrewsbury, and on Wednesday the Commissioners went to the latter place, and found the Quincy heifer on a farm owned by Mr. Houghton of Dorchester, and carried on by E. K. Pratt. These two named gentlemen are joint owners of the stock on the place. The Commissioners killed the five cows and two yoke of oxen. The first two cows killed were found to be diseased. Another cow was diseased in both lungs; a cyst the size of a man's fist being found in the lower lobe of the left lung, and a still larger one in the anterior part of the lobe of the right lung. Two of the cows proved to be healthy. Of the four oxen killed only one was found to be diseased. We learn that the Commissioners are to visit other farms in the County, where it is feared an infection among the cattle exists.—Worcester Spy.

'BUY ME AND I'LL DO YOU GOOD.'

HEALTH AND STRENGTH SECURED, by the use of the Great Spring and Summer Medicine,

DR. LANGLEY'S

Root and Herb Bitters,

Composed of Sarsaparilla, Wild Cherry, Yellow Dock, Prickly Ash, Thoroughwort, Rhubarb, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., all of which are so compounded as to act in concert, and assist Nature in eradicating disease.

The effect of this medicine is most wonderful - it acts directly upon the bowels and blood, by removing all obstructions from the internal organs, stimulating them into healthy action, renovating the fountains of life, purifying the blood, cleansing it from all humors, and causing it to course anew through every part of the body; restoring the invalid to health and usefulness. - They cure and eradicate from the system, Liver Complaint, that mother-worm of so many diseases; Jaundice in its worst forms, all Bilious Diseases and foul stomach, dyspepsia, constipation, all kinds of humors, indigestion, headache, dizziness, piles, hemorrhoids, weakness, pain in the side and liver, a disordered stomach, or bad blood, to which all are more or less subject in Spring and Summer.

More than 2,000,000 persons have been cured by this medicine. It is highly recommended by Physicians everywhere. Try it, and you will never regret it.

Sold by all Dealers in Medicine everywhere at only 25 and 38 cents per bottle.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Rebel Braggarts.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

You mighty valiant cavaliers—
You most exalted braves,
Who promised you would welcome us
To hospitable graves.

Who vow'd to fight 'till all was blue,
'Midst thunder blood and toil;
And kill and eat the yankee crew
Who touch'd your "sacred soil."

Have you forgotten all your brag,
Your boasted pow'r to fight;
Or has there on your rebel flag,
Come down a sudden blight.

Has Roanoke and Fort Dorelson
So stupefied your sense,
That you were forc'd to eat and run
With such a weak defence.

Some dozens of your braves were hurt,
But many thousands scar'd;
Resigning all that sacred dirt,
For Yankee graves prepar'd.

Oh great and mighty cavaliers!
The cat's let out of the bag—
You are a set of larking cubs,
Who play the game of brag.

You take good care to save your skins
When balls are whistling by;
And rather trust to nimble shins
Than to your chivalry.

You in the balance have been tried,
And wanting you are found—
A bloated bag of windy pride,
Unwholesome and unsound.

Descendants of the courtly bird
Who left their home behind,
To shun the fate of earning bread,
Or halter for their crimes.

Your hospitality you boast;
But all you have to give,
Is wrang from that poor tolling host,
On whom you meanly live.

Then cease your blaring insolence,
Your flaunting crest is shorn;
Your bragging threats are no defence—
They but excite our scorn.

The stripes and stars our fathers gave—
That banner of the free—
Aloft in triumph soon shall wave, Where'er their children be.

"A Hundred Years to Come"

O where will be the birds that sing,
A hundred years to come?
The flowers that now in beauty spring,
A hundred years to come?
The rose lip, the lofty brow,
The heart that beats so gayly now?
O, where will be the love's beaming eye,
Joy's pleasant smile, and sorrow's sigh,
A hundred years to come?

Who'll press for gold this crowded street,
A hundred years to come?
Who'll tread on church with willing feet,
A hundred years to come?
Pale trembling age, and fiery youth,
And childhood with its brow of truth,
The rich and poor, no land and sea,
Where will the mighty millions be,
A hundred years to come?

We all within our graves shall sleep,
A hundred years to come!
No living soul for us will weep,
A hundred years to come!
But other men our lands will fill,
And others than our streets will fill;
While other birds will sing as gay,
As bright the sunshine as to-day,
A hundred years to come!

Anecdotes.

A boy went into a baker's shop for a two-penny loaf, and conceiving it to be diminutive in size, remarked to the baker that he did not believe it was weight.
Never mind that, said the man of dough, you will have the less to carry.
True, replied the lad; throwing three half-pence on the counter, left the shop.
The baker called him, saying he had not left money enough.
Never mind that, said the boy, you'll have the less to count.

An Irish lawyer, in a neighboring county, lately addressed the court as "gentlemen" instead of "your honors." After he had concluded, a brother of the bar reminded him of his error. He immediately arose to apologize thus:
May it please the court in the heat of debate I called yer honors gentlemen. I made a mistake, yer honors.
The gentleman sat down, and we hope the court was satisfied.

A lawyer went into a barber's shop to procure a wig. In taking the dimensions of the lawyer's head the barber exclaimed:
Why, how long your head is, sir!
Yes, replied our worthy friend, we lawyers must have long heads.
The barber proceeded with his vocation, but at length he exclaimed:
Why, sir, your head is as thick as it is long.

Is your father at work now? inquired a gentleman of a little girl who came for cold victuals.
O yeth, thir, he'll to work, was the prompt reply.
What is he doing?
What he doing? O, thir, he'll helping my mother get dinner!

PURE LIQUORS AND WINES FOR PRIVATE USE AND MEDICAL PURPOSES.

WE offer to the country trade and consumers, a complete assortment of every variety of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and would say that our experience of more than FORTY years as Importers is not only a sufficient guarantee for the Purity of our Goods, but that it enables us to offer advantages to buyers that can not be excelled by any house in Boston. Owing to the difficulty of procuring, in many towns, a strictly pure and reliable article of Liquors and Wines for medicinal and other purposes, we have for many years given particular attention to filling orders for PRIVATE USE, and consumers will find it greatly to their advantage to send their orders to us direct, as we employ no travelling or other agents whatever. Persons who require Pure Liquors or Wines, in large or small quantities, may rest assured that all orders will receive our best personal attention, and that every article sent from our house will be satisfactory in every respect. Communications by mail will receive prompt attention, with full and complete catalogue of goods, prices, &c.

THE SPECIFIC PILL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR Spermatorrhoea, or Seminal Weakness, and General Debility in either sex. This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It saps the very springs of life, enervates the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into indolence and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of THE SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY. We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhoea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—E. KIRK, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired—Their effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used them in a case of Spermatorrhoea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E. P. DICKER, M. D.

This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

PRICE—$1 per Box. Six Boxes for $5, by mail, prepaid. For sale, by all respectable Druggists, and at the Sole General Depot in the United States, by J. WINCHESTER, 36 John St., N. Y.

HEBARD'S PATENT OIL!

No more accidents by Burning Fluid! A safe substitute to burn in Fluid Lamps. THIS Oil is prepared to burn in all kinds of Lamps without chimneys, such as Fluid, Sperm or Lamp Oil Lamps, and will burn at half the cost of Fluid in all Lamps fixed with Green's Jet Burners, and is the greatest Artificial Light yet discovered. It gives a steady, clean and soft light, and does not choke the Lungs with foreign matters, such as results generally from using Rosin and Kerosene Oil, and will burn in Kerosene Lamps free from Smoke and Smell by taking off the Cap and Chimney.

It is also a COMPLETE SUBSTITUTE for Sperm and Lamp Oils, and is just as safe and harmless to burn, and may take the place of the Common Fluid and other dangerous compounds that have been thrown into the market of late.

The above Oil is perfectly clean and free from Grease and Smoke or unpleasant odor, and is now considered the SAFEST and BEST Oil ever offered to the public. It is a most desirable article, and what is more than ALL it is unexpensive.

Any person can have samples sent by express, if desired. State, County and Town Rights for sale, with full directions to make, by addressing the Patentee.

Carval applied for and granted Feb. 24th, 1860. Letters patent issued Feb. 19th, 1861. The above Oil retails for $1.00 per gallon. Wholesale 80 cents per gallon. Orders solicited and filled with despatch. Letters promptly answered.

DR. LA CROIX'S PRIVATE MEDICAL TREATIES

ON THE Physiological View of Marriage. 250 PAGES AND 130 ENGRAVINGS. Price only TWENTY FIVE CENTS. Sent free of postage to all parts of the Union. On the infirmities of youth and maturity, disclosing the secret follies of both sexes at all ages, causing debility, nervousness, depression of spirits, palpitation of the heart, suicidal imaginings, involuntary emissions, bushings, defective memory, indigestion and lassitude, with confessions of thrilling interest of a Boarding School Miss, a College Student, and a Young Married Lady, &c. It is a truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain secret doubts of their physical condition, and who are conscious of having hazarded the health, happiness and privileges to which every human being is entitled.

YOUNG MEN who are troubled with weakness, generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness, pains, forgetfulness, sometimes a ringing in the ears, weak eyes, weakness of the back and lower extremities, confusion of ideas, loss of memory, with melancholy, may be cured by the author's NEW PARIS AND LONDON TREATMENT.

We have recently devoted much of our time in VISITING THE EUROPEAN HOSPITALS, availing ourselves of the knowledge and researches of the most skilled Physicians and Surgeons in Europe and the Continent. Those who place themselves under our care will now have the full benefit of the many NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDIES which we are enabled to introduce into our practice, and the public may rest assured of the same zeal, assiduity, SECRECY and attention being paid to their cases, which has so successfully distinguished us heretofore, as a Physician in our PECULIAR department of professional Practice, for the past twenty-five years.

THE FEMALE PILLS. Ladies who wish to preserve the efficacy of which has been tested in thousands of cases, and never failed to effect speedy cures without any bad results will use none but Dr. DeLaney's Female Periodical PILLS. The only precaution necessary to be observed is, ladies should not take them if they have reason to believe they are in certain situations (the particulars of which will be found on the wrapper accompanying each box,) though always safe and healthy, so gentle, yet so active are they.

Price $1 per box. They can be mailed to any part of the United States or Canada.

TO THE LADIES—Who need a confidential medical adviser with regard to any of those interesting complaints to which their delicate organization renders them liable, are particularly invited to consult us.

THE "ELECTRO-GALVANIC PROTECTIVE." For married ladies whose health will not admit, or who have no desire to increase their families, may be obtained as above. It is a perfectly safe preventive to conception, and has been extensively used during the last 20 years. Price reduced to $10.

THE SECRETS OF YOUTH UNVEILED. A Treatise on the Cause of Premature Decay—A solemn warning. Just published, a book showing the insidious progress and prevalence among school, (both male and female,) of this fatal habit, pointing out the fatality that inevitably attends its victims, and depicting the whole progress of the disease, from the beginning to the end.

It will be sent by Mail on receipt of two [3] cent Stamps.

Attendance daily, from 8 in the morning till 9 at night, and on Sundays from 2 till 5 P. M.

Medicines with full directions sent to any part of the United States or Canada, by patients communicating their symptoms by letter. Business correspondence strictly confidential.
